TO THE

REV. C. O. GOODFORD, D.D.

PROVOST OF ETON.

My Dear Provost,

I am much indebted to you for the encouragement you have freely and kindly given to this work of mine, and for the permission to dedicate it to yourself.

In proposing this, my desire was to associate the work in some degree with the name and fame of Eton; to send it forth from our local Press, as an offshoot of the scholarship fostered in this ancient School and College.

I might, having myself been a Member of the Sister Royal Foundation, and remembering that its present Provost was the first to originate the idea of compiling and issuing an Eton Horace, have hesitated between his claims and yours upon any tribute of respect that I had to offer. But we Assistant Masters (like the Armenians in Tacitus) are ambigua gens ingeniis et situ. Actual members of an University College, we are locally and virtually attached to this place, round which cluster the recollections of early training, and the thoughts of present usefulness: and it is an object of honourable and grateful ambition to produce any work worthy of the Imprimatur of the College, and the approbation of its representative—yourself.

I address myself in this edition to Scholars generally, and the literary world. Not that I have the pretensions to teach, which some may think implied in the name of Editor—

> 'I only speak right on,
> 'I tell you that which you yourselves do know.'

But having lived many years in an Horatian atmosphere, among Colleagues too of the keen and tasteful scholarship whom you, your predecessor, and your successor have rejoiced to gather under the shadow of these walls,—I needed but the humble qualities of method and observation to gather, and simplicity of language to convey, much that served for illustration of my subject. Eton abounds in springs intellectual, as our neighbouring high commons do in natural springs, plentiful and proper for irrigation, wanting but the channel to draw them off.

I have tried, ὡς ὅτ' ἀνὴρ ὀχετηγός, to open such a channel, to draw off the ready rills into the vale of literature. If they flow clear and perennial, thanks will be due to many friends.

It is by degrees that the book has assumed its present size and substance. I thought at first only of supplying a good School Manual, taking salient points, correcting prevalent errors, suggesting an outline for lecturing. Then a wish for fuller detail led to an Appendix, miscellaneous, and, in some points that required argument, copious. The present work has a wider range and aim: minor and elementary notes have been withdrawn, to make room for new matter, and for the citations, which are mostly substituted for mere references.

I trust the execution of the whole will prove worthy of the sanction you extend to it. You are not of course answerable for my short-comings; but your name, thus placed at the head, may well be received as a general guarantee that the plan has not been hastily or heedlessly undertaken.

I am,

Very thankfully and sincerely yours,

JOHN EYRE YONGE.

PREFACE.

It is curious to contrast the number of Continental Editions of Horace with the rarity of those of English growth. The latter may be counted on the fingers; the list of the former, given fifty years ago by Mitscherlich, extends over a hundred pages. Yet Horace has been eminently a favourite with our Scholars, imitated and paraphrased perpetually, not seldom translated, quoted universally at all times, on all subjects. It is strange if he has not his full share of patient editorial regard and criticism, of comment and elucidation, claiming to be at once popular and sound.

It is not that he does not invite such care: his style may appear at first sight easy, but there is no book in which a careless student is more liable to mistake; a characteristic due perhaps to his nicety, polish, and exactness of language, and which in part accounts for his general adoption in school teaching and in all classical tests.

Again, he may be illustrated at every step from other Latin authors, and in turn reflect light on them: he is full of Lucretius; his adaptations from Cicero and Terence are remarkable; his coincidence with Virgilian expressions still more so; Ovid has borrowed freely from him; Persius is almost wholly to be explained from him: so that, small as its bulk is, there is probably no other single book that gives a student so much insight into the peculiarities of the Latin language, or would so well prepare him for meeting and mastering the thousand and one problems of an University Examination Paper on the writers of the Augustan or the Silver Age.

At the same time the task presented to an Editor of Horace is far less formidable than that of commenting upon many other authors. Equal discrimination and practice may be required, but far less research. The questions of ethnology, legend, philosophy, that open upon an Editor of Virgil, would seem to be absolutely inexhaustible; the topics of discussion in Horace are limited by narrow lines; and close at hand. His poems are either imitative, and require from a commentator a not very extensive knowledge of the dramatic and lyric poets of Greece; or they are personal, anecdotical, touching on common life or Roman manners. And this is no doubt one reason of his coming home, as it were, to all readers, one secret of the interest belonging to him. "The proper subject of mankind is man:" and he has treated this subject lightly and naturally. He is, as it were, playful to the passing observer, suggestive to the thoughtful. Other poets have their separate spheres, their own distinct lines of gracefulness or glory, their place and rank in the library, their set and special study: but Horace, whatever his rank or merit as a poet may be, is also the familiar acquaintance, the everyday companion; the Addison* of the Augustan age: the volume is, in its degree, a refined literary handbook, one, like the author himself,

Quem tollere reda
Vellet iter faciens.†

This is perhaps chiefly the English estimate, and I know not how far it may be ascribed to any resemblance between

* I refer my readers to Macaulay's masterly sketch of Addison.

† I am tempted to quote a case in point,—that of two friends of mine, not many years ago, at Rome, meeting as strangers, but presently discovering a common ground of interest in University distinctions, and still earlier recollections of the same Alma Matercula. They soon came to (what I venture to call) a very Etonian agreement: You put your Horace in your pocket; I will put the horses to my carriage; and we will go to Tivoli.

our own national character, and the Roman when cultivated and refined. Certainly it is remarkable how extensively Horace has coloured the literature and permeated the mind of England. Poets, statesmen, moralists draw their sentiments or support them from him: Pitt's well known resigno quæ dedit,—Lord North's punning correction of nimirum, when unduly shortened into an anapæst, —Newton of Olney's, even Matthew Henry's, perpetual citations are instances. Burke cannot discuss the Revolution Society and its principles, without citing and dressing up in metaphor condo et compono quæ mox depromere possim; and his language (whether he had the passage in his memory or not) serves as the finest exemplification that exists of the meaning of concordia discors.

For a specimen of beautiful and instructive parallelism, the reader may refer to the quotation from Young's Night Thoughts in the note on Ode IV. VII, which however has not been brought forward by any preceding Editors.

In this respect especially, which has been but too generally neglected, and, in the nature of things, cannot well be supplied by foreign Editors, I think that a new and English edition of Horace is a desideratum. Without touching on the conclusions plainly stated by Mr. Shilleto, in his Preface to the de Falsa Legatione, the value of this feature in a comprehensive English edition must be manifest, whether as involving helps to vivid and expressive translation, or as a link in the world of letters, and an evidence of the reaction and play of thought: and I hesitate not to assert that, in the case of no other author, is such illustration so proper, so accessible, so abundant.

The merits, tendencies, and tone of his works, it is not my province to discuss. I will just mention, that they have been discussed pleasingly and instructively in the Lectures on Poetry by the Rev. E. Monro; and I think it well conceived that, in Horace's lyric and ideal world, in the Odes, the plaintive character of the poetry gives it a point of union with modern feeling.

I pass rather to the critical question respecting the form and structure of his Lyrics, and I extract (both for its own value, and as my authority for printing the Odes as I do without headings) the following passages from an essay by Buttmann, translated in Vol. I. of the Philological Museum, p. 441:—

"Far the largest part of the titles to Horace's poems consist of ad, with the name of the person to whom the poem is addrest. This is just our own mode, which we ascribe to the ancients, by which a dedication becomes an empty form, devoid of any real meaning. The ingenious practice of the ancients, in speaking on a matter which touched their heart nearly, was to fancy that some person, whom they loved or esteemed, was standing by them, and to shape their thoughts as if they were talking to him. This could not be exprest in a better or livelier way than by a simple vocative, which they introduced in a suitable place, but the pleasing effect of which is altogether missed, if we have already had to read the name at full length at the head of the poem. Let a person for instance only read the Odes to Fuscus and to Postumus (I. XXII.; II. XIV.) and he will feel the truth of my assertion.

"When Horace, in copying a pretty Greek poem, such as in Ode I. XVIII. renders it word for word in this manner,

Nullam, Vare, sacra vite prius severis arborem, one clearly sees that his sole view in this address was to give his imitation a livelier air; and that a title, which makes the poem look like a poetical epistle actually sent to Varus, and called forth by some real occurrence, is a complete absurdity.

"From these remarks, it is clear in the first place, that, like every title of whatever kind, which points out the object of a poem any further than that object is distinctly and fully exprest in the poem itself, every dedicatory title, which is not grounded on a vocative of this sort, is utterly wrong, and has grown out of some blunder or some arbitrary interpolation. * * * *

"The absurdity of the present titles, taken collectively, appears also from this,—that, while as we have just seen, the accidental occurrence of a vocative in an ode is made the ground for heading it with a name very slightly, if at all, connected with its subject; when the poet on the other hand couches his thoughts in such a form, that the name he is doing honour to appears only in the third person, although the whole ode relates to him, like that on Numida's return (I. XXXVI.) it is still left without any title, as if it were on some general topic.

"No mistake however can be more unfortunate, than that of looking on the Odes of Horace as a number of occasional poems, each of which, at the time when it was composed, was grounded, as a matter of course, on some real occurrence, and could not be understood, to the full extent of its meaning, except at the moment and by the persons concerned in it, though Horace published it some time after, because it flattered one of his friends, or because it happened to be lying in his portfolio. The only end that Horace kept constantly in view was, to give the Grecian lyre to Latium. With this design he took many of the best subjects, with which the Greek models furnished him, fitted for being treated lyrically, and imitated those models, but in a genial spirit of imitation: at times, as one may fairly presume of such a writer, his own imagination supplied him with like subjects: now and then too—for who will deny this?—incidents in his own life, or among his friends, afforded him materials, which he made use of for a similar purpose.

"When, in the course of a few years, his pen had thrown off a number of such essays, he collected a portion, though, as we know and see, only a small one, of his earlier and later pieces, which, by steadily and laboriously polishing them, he had brought near to what he considered as perfection, and, uniting them in a book, now at length sent them out into the world. Nobody, it is to be hoped, will fancy that each of these collections was conveyed by Horace with a number of Scholiums; or that high and low in Rome were familiarly acquainted with all the anecdotical incidents which gave rise to each several ode; or that our poet, whose grave and noble purpose we have just stated, went about his task so negligently, as to bind up even a single flower in the posy he placed before the public, the real excellence of which could not be fully discerned without a knowledge of such trivialities as the Romans were no less ignorant of than we are.

"The reader, who looks at all the allusions in Horace's lyrical poems, with the exception of the patriotical ones, from an ideal point of view, will, so far at least, be fully able to relish every beauty that they contain."

I come now to the consideration of the Text adopted. In determining it, I have relied much upon Orelli, his judgment as an Editor being acknowledged, and his Swiss MSS. being, with one exception, the most ancient and authoritative, and for the most part I should feel distrust of myself in differing from his decision. Still, there are not a few places in which it may fairly be questioned. I have differed from him with much hesitation in C. III. XXIV. 24, and XXIX. 34. I must refer to my notes for my justification. I feel less doubt about C. III. xxv. and no doubt at all about admitting Lachmann's reading in C. III. xxiv. 4. But as the line in its present form may appear at first sight a venturous change, I may defend myself from the imputation of rashness here. In fact, the change is less than it seems: Terrenum is a very slight alteration from the Tirrenum of the MSS. (e. g. the Harl. B. and E.); and publicum is read both in the oldest Blandinian MS. and in the Harl. E. These considerations, with the positive objections to Apulicum given in the note, seem to me to furnish ample ground for adopting the correction.

The kindred corruption of Apuliæ, in C. III. iv. 10, I am obliged to leave. Yet, in the absence of any correction which has any claim to probability, I venture to offer a conjecture of my own. After inspecting all the MSS. accessible to me, and finding no variants that could suggest a clue, I inferred that the elements of the missing word were probably contained in its corrupt substitute; and it occurred to me that the error might have been introduced from the line above, by the repetition of Ap. (just so cuilibet is introduced in one MS. in E. I. vi. 54, for cui volet; and, in E. I. xiv. 21, vocas for putas.) The remaining letters VLLIÆ (for a common spelling is Apulliæ) suggest to me a word familiar in Horace, and possibly, as a diminutive inviting abbreviation, VILLVLÆ.* There is sufficient authority in the best MS. for limina; besides that, the corrupt A, when introduced, would account for the absorption of the final A, and a good sense would be extracted,—Altricis extra limina villulæ, "beyond the pre-"cincts of my native homestead."

I have very recently observed, in the Scholium of Acron, an apparent correspondence with, and confirmation of this conjecture. His words are,—'parvus extra casæ limen expositus.'

* As an instance of similar corruption, I may quote 'Vita brevem dominum sequetur,' for 'Ulla brevem,' etc. The same MS. (κ) miswrites villula thus,—uuillula.

But the tracing out my idea suggested to me another emendation, which, but for this Scholium, I should think more probable. Which is the right reading, altricis or nutricis? Editors prefer the former word; MS. authority clearly favours the latter. The two are nearly synonymous, but nutricis rather indicates a personal than a local name, as the proper word to stand in apposition to it. A slighter change than that proposed above supplies one. The addition of one letter, or even the change of a to c, will give VILICE=VILICÆ: (according to the common MS. writing of e for æ.) The vilica was an important person in a plain country home, the responsible manager for every part of the household arrangements; (Venit in locum matronæ, says Columella, who has a long description of her duties, lib. XII. ab init.) On the supposition that the poet was motherless, who would have been more likely to have the ordinary charge of him? If these deductions are admissible, the reading of the text should be thus,—'Nutricis extra limina vilicæ.'

I find the phrase extra limen used in a somewhat analogous way by Pliny, (Ep. III. III.) used of sending a boy from home pupilage to a preceptor out of doors,—Studia extra limen proferenda sunt.

There are several minor corrections, which I need not notice here. The Various Readings, given below the text, are selected partly for their MS. authority, or their acceptance in past editions, or their intrinsic claims to attention.

In the matter of general Orthography, I assent to modern usage, and the principles stated by Mr. Munro in his preface to Lucretius; for I confess to a prejudice in favour of uniformity and correctness. Yet I have also a considerable sympathy for 'mumpsimus,' and I am half inclined to rest on the example and authority of Augustus, and to retain the double l in millia. Spelling no doubt has its right and wrong, as well as other things; nor are the questions it raises unimportant for precision in learning, or for directing attention to the formation and meaning of words. Nor is it impossible that, as the Latin Grammar is very commonly made an instructor in the rudiments of English, so a reform in Latin orthography may lead to a greater exactness in our own language. But hitherto we have claimed the privilege of doing as we like with our own, especially in the matter of local and personal names, and Shakespeare retains his second a, much as Virgil does his i, without offence to any reader. The controversy as to English is somewhat older; the results as to Latin seem likely to be more rapid and definite. M. Wagner indeed (Preface to Aulularia) refrains from shocking the general eye by Bacanalia for Bacchanalia; but the doubts of one generation are said to be the maxims of the next, and we may look to find eventually solvitur scribendo.

Of the MSS. of Horace, the most valued is

1. The Blandinius antiquissimus, from the Blandinian Library in Ghent, a MS. of the IXth Century at latest.

2. Orelli collated a yet older MS. dating from the VIIIth Century, existing at Berne. It is marked by him B. I note some peculiar spelling in it: it has paelex constantly, for pellex; the old forms flavos, fulvos, for flavus; obicere, for objicere; adiciant, etc.; and the accusative in *is so uniformly, that I have adopted it, noting the common form in the Various Readings. It is indeed, though I had forgotten this, received and justified by Bentley.

3. Next to this is ranked another Bernese MS. of the Xth Century, which Orelli marks b.

4. His next MS. is of the same date, at St. Gallen in Switzerland; marked S.

* This rule is for I-nouns,—those which make the gen. pl. in ium. B. however sometimes confounds the nom. with the acc. as in C. IV. VII. 13; X. 8: and, besides, there is no error more common in MSS. than putting i for e: the reverse, e for i, is rare.

5. A Zurich MS. same date; T.

6. A Bernese MS. same date; c.

7. Of the MSS. collated by Bentley, the most valued is one of the Xth Century, preserved at Queen's College, Oxford, and lettered κ. I have, by the kind permission of the Provost, cursorily examined it, and noted many readings. I have also collated, and hope to do so more fully, the best of the Harleian MSS. in the British Museum. The oldest (Hl. A.) appears to me more trustworthy in the general text, as it is certainly more accurate in the transcribing, than the Queen's College MS. I should imagine it to be older, but both are referred to the Xth Century.

The list and lettering of these MSS. (after Combe) is as follows:—

No. of Coll.
2725	a MS. nearly complete of the		Xth	Century	A
3534	,,	,,	XIIth	,,	B
2724	,,	,,	XIIIth	,,	C
3754	,,	,,	XVth	,,	D
2609*	,,	,,	XIIIth	,,	E
4862	,,	,,	XVth	,,	F
2621	,,	,,	XIIIth	,,	G

I have gleaned some information from them, and have found my orthography justified by them. They authorise umerus (though not umor,) erus, erilis, harena, totiens, quotiens, honustus (a reading of importance in Sat. I. VI. 96) honus, haut, habrotonum, hiemps, Hiber, Hiberiæ, Euhoe, tempto, neglego, belua, Juppiter.

I differ in this from them, that they are not uniform in their mode, which I conceive myself bound to be.

I have hesitated to adopt the form st for est, when preceded by a syllable capable of elision.* Wagner (Orthographia,

* That the e of est should be capable of elision, and be elided in preference to a long vowel preceding, is analogous to the Greek usage: that it should follow m, as in durumst, is curious, as a contrast to the principle of the now accepted spelling hiemps, sumpsi, etc. in which the labial (again after a Greek analogy, e. g. in βλώσκω, βροτός, ἤμβροτον) is required as a fulcrum between the same two consonants.

v. EST) has established the legitimacy of this form, both in prose and poetry; and he has printed it throughout his Virgil. Lachmann cites a profusion of instances for it (Lucr. I. 993; III. 954.) The MSS. of Lucretius and Virgil exhibit it constantly. In those of Horace, as less ancient, the evidence for it is sparing: a few instances occur in B, chiefly, it may be remarked, in the Ars Poetica; one of them (in v. 386) is confirmed by κ, which gives judicium sit; and in the same MS. I find at S. II. III. 221, the reading qui scelerat' est, evidently=sceleratust. Again, the not unfrequent omission of est at the close of a verse, e. g. S. I. IX. 42, II. v. 8, may indicate the form. I have received it only where so quoted by Lachmann, and shewn to be necessary by his rules, adding an instance not cited by him in Epod. xv. 12; and I have placed it (wherever I conceive it admissible) among the Various Readings; with the double advantage of suggesting it as probably correct, and of allowing their choice to those who prefer the accepted text.

I have consulted the notes of Lambinus, Gesner, Mitscherlich, C. Fea, the Delphin, Bentley, Orelli; and the lists also of Various Readings in Obbar, for the 1st Book of Epistles, and in Keller, for the Odes. The latter presents a very large collation of MSS., but, with the exception of a few corrections, has not much of value to add to Orelli's list. He exhibits the orthography of Ritschel and Fleckeisen, and some curious innovations in the text: e. g. Bentley's conjecture in I. XXIII. 5; discere for ducere, III. III. 34; ascias for arcus, III. XXVI. 7; and Epod. v. 88.

The order in which the works of Horace are usually printed, viz., Odes, Epodes, Satires, Epistles, is apparently different from that of their composition. Their dates, as conjecturally assigned by Bentley, are given below; and in spite of the difficulty of reconciling them to particular passages in the several books, their principle seems to be acquiesced in. The question has this principal point of interest about it, that it bears upon Horace's character as a man and a poet; since we find, in passing from the Epodes and Satires to the Odes and Epistles, a higher refinement of feeling and power of poetry: the harsh and objectionable passages of the first works find no place in the latter: and while the gracefulness of his lyrics justifies all the claims he makes as "Romanæ fidicen lyræ," there is no less a grace in the soft and mellowed ease of the Epistles of his declining age. Moreover (as is shewn in G. Stallbaum's preface to his edition) it may be found that the historical events of the different periods account for the bitternesses and asperities of the earlier books, composed while he was struggling with adversity, and pining under a neglect, from which his genius soon raised him, but to which, for the time, it must have made him the more sensitive. And the recollection of the miseries arising out of the anarchy and violence of the Civil War—"quæque ipse miserrima vidit, et quorum pars magna fuit"—might well suggest to him the admiration for the Emperor expressed in the joyful and adulatory language which, however excessive to our ears, did not sound so to his contemporaries.

The Epodes are alluded to (Ep. I. XIX. 23) as "Parii iambi." This name was applied to poems in which each second verse was shorter than the first (as in elegiac poetry), e. g. the 1st Epode,—or in which one of the verses was made up of two metres of distinct character, as in Epode 13.

The Satires are the "Græcis intactum carmen," (Sat. I. x. 66) according to the Roman boast of Quintilian,—"Satira tota nostra est," (X. 1. 93), a kind of poetry first struck out by Ennius ("Ennius noster," Cic. pro Arch. VIII. 10.), followed, at some interval, and with a difference in the treatment of the subject, by Lucilius. The name is derived from "satur," the miscellaneous character of the subjects being compared to the "satura lanx," i. e. the dish of various fruits offered as a sacrifice, or firstfruits; and then coming to signify any "hash" or "olio." So Juvenal describes his work as a "farrago," and "quidquid agunt homines" as its legitimate materials to work up.

The Odes, on the contrary, are formed on the Greek type, and some, no doubt, directly adapted from Greek originals, keeping even the Greek names. From them it is we derive our chief knowledge of the Alcaic and Sapphic metres, for we have but disjointed fragments of their first authors; but as far as we can compare them, Horace seems to have improved upon his models, in point of metrical* harmony as well as precision,—a merit in which he may be contrasted with Ovid, who, however remarkable for the variety of cadence and rhythm in his verse, is far inferior to the Greek elegiasts. The restriction, no doubt suited to the genius of the Latin language, hampers it nevertheless in his poems, and loses all the flexibility and ease, and much of the grace, of his models. We have a few lyric odes from Catullus; but whether they had less circulation, or were less formally published in books, they are not considered to interfere, by their simple priority of time, with Horace's claim of being the first introducer into Italy of the Æolian strains.

The Epistles are probably, of all Horace's works, the most admired; and they are those which seem to place us most at home with the author, and to give the most pleasing reflex of his character. Otherwise, they may be classed generally with his Satires, as a sort of continuation of them, but with the softened and easy style betokening inward satisfaction, prosperity, and content. What Niebuhr says of Cicero's "Pro Murena" might perhaps be nearly as applicable to their character. (Lect. 42.)

* Numerosus Horatius.—Ov. Trist. IV. 10.

Of Horace's personal history and fortunes, he has left us scattered notices. He was of a plain middle-class family at Venusia, a military colony on the Lucanian frontier, (Sat. II. I. 36:) his father, in rank a libertinus, was by occupation a "coactor," or collector of payments made for sales at auction, a man of unblemished character and strong sound sense, with judgment enough to foresee the value of a good education, and to send his son to Rome for it. (Sat. I. VI. 64. sqq.) From Rome Horace went to Athens (Ep. II. II. 43), until the breaking out of the Civil War, in which, zealously joining the side of his friend Brutus, he held the rank of military tribune, until the rout of Philippi. In the overthrow of his party he suffered the loss of his small estate, but still had saved enough to purchase a sort of Treasury clerkship, which maintained him while he sought for help and patronage of another kind by the productions of his genius. (Ep. II. II. 51.)

Then followed his introduction to Mæcenas, which soon ripened into a friendship honourable to both, developing a feeling of esteem on one side, of gratitude on the other,—a gratitude never forgotten, but never lessening independence; of that true kind, which is not ashamed of having gifts* conferred. He was (Sat. II. VI. 42) first taken up as an amusing retailer of gossip: as his qualities developed themselves, he assumed gradually, and was content with so assuming, a more creditable position. He found himself admitted to the intimacy of the greatest, and that on a fair and equal footing: and, to maintain him, he received the present of a farm in the Sabine district, about thirty-five miles north of Rome.

He is not merely, then, the grateful client, but the attached friend: and where can we find a truer affection than that breathed in the first Epode, and the Ode II. XVII.? To which we may add, the pleasure with which he dwells elsewhere on his friend's recovery, and the popular acclamation to him (as in Od. I. XX.); while with it we instinctively connect the remembrance, that the promise of the Ode was truly spoken, and that the last journey was trodden by the patron and the poet in the same year.

* Cic. Ep. II. VI. "Animi ingenui cui multum debeas eidem plurimum velle debere."

His figure, as well as his temper (to the quickness of which he elsewhere alludes, as in Od. III. XIV. 27) he has described in Ep. I. XX.

The anticipation there expressed, that among the signs of approval of his works would be that of their adoption as a text-book in schools, is confirmed by Juvenal (Sat. VII. 226.) Persius, his admirer and imitator, has characterised his genius in well-known lines, Sat. I. 115 :—

> Omne vafer vitium ridenti Flaccus amico
> Tangit, et admissus circum præcordia ludit,
> Callidus excusso populum suspendere naso.

In modern times there may be found a singular testimonial to him, and one which curiously indicates the universal classic taste. It is in "Walton's Life of Hooker," where he mentions that Edwin Sandys and George Cranmer, taking a journey to see Hooker, "found him with a book in his hand (it was the Odes of Horace,) he being then, like humble and innocent Abel, tending his small allotment of sheep in a common field."

Subjoined are references to the markings of time, and notices of contemporary events, collected from Horace's works, with the dates affixed:

B. C.

65. Birth of Horace. Consulship of L. A. Cotta and L. M. Torquatus (Carm. III. XXI.; Epod. XIII. 8.).—Ad Aufidum (Carm. III. XXX. 10.; IV. IX. 2.)

60. The first triumvirate (Carm. II. I. 1—4.).—The Civil War and victories of Julius Cæsar (vv. 20—28.)

59. Consulship of Julius Cæsar and M. Calp. Bibulus (Carm. III. XXVIII. 8.)

53. Defeat of Crassus (alluded to, Carm. III. VI. 9.)

46. Death of Cato Uticensis (Carm. I. XII. 35.)

43. (? 42.) Brutus in Asia as prætor (Sat. I. VII. 18.)

42. Philippi (Carm. II. VII. 9.; III. IV. 26.; Ep. II. II. 49.)—Consule Planco (Carm. III. XIV. 28.)

41. Horace's introduction to Mæcenas (Sat. I. VI. 55; II. VI. 40.)

40. War with the Parthians, and defeat of Antony's troops under D. Saxa (Carm. III. VI. 9.)—Herod is mentioned, Ep. II. II. 184: he received his kingdom in this year.

39. A. Pollio's successes in Illyria (Carm. II. I.)

39. (? 37.) The journey to Brundusium (Sat. I. V.)*

36. Defeat off Naulochus, crushing Sextus Pompeius (Epod. IX. 7.)

31. Actium (Ep. I. XVIII. 61.)—Wars on the Dacian Frontier (Carm. III. VI. 14. Sat. II. VI. 53.)

30. Death of Antony and Cleopatra (Carm. I. XXXVII.; IV. XIV. 35.)

29. Temple of Janus shut (Carm. IV. XV. 9.)

27. The name of Augustus conferred (Carm. II. IX. 19. The name does not occur in the Satires, Epodes, or 1st Book of Odes.) Augustus in Spain meditates an expedition to Britain (Carm. I. XXXV. 29.)

25. Horace marks his 40th year, Carm. II. IV. 23.—Dacian conquests (Carm. III. VIII. 18.)

* Milman gives these dates:—Philippi, 42. Horace's return to Rome, 41. His abode there, and intimacy with Virgil and Varius. His purchase of the Scriptus Quæstorius, to support himself, 40. His first presentation to Mæcenas, 39. Journey to Brundusium, 37. Stallbaum and Orelli refer the last event to 37 likewise, and the peace of Tarentum: Heyne, in Vitâ Virgilii (quoad.), to 39.

B. C.

24. Æl. Gallus' march in Arabia (Carm. I. xxix. and xxxv. 31.)—The conquest of N. Spain (Carm. III. viii. 22.)—Augustus returns to Italy (Carm. III. xiv.)—Death of Q. Varus, of Cremona (Carm. I. xxiv.)

23. Augustus, at the point of death, cured by A. Musa; of whom Ep. I. xv. 3.

22. Conspiracy and death of Murena (of whom, Carm. II. x. His brother Proculeius mentioned, Carm. II. ii. 5.)

21. Horace 44 (Epod. i. 20. 28.)—Coss. Æm. Lepidus, M. Lollius.

20. Tiberius in the East. Pacification of Armenia and Parthia. The standards recovered. (Ep. I. xii. 27; I. xviii. 56; Carm. II. ii. 17; II. ix. 20.)

19. Final conquest of the Cantabri (Ep. I. xii. 26.)—Death of Virgil (of whom, Carm. I. iii.); of Tibullus (to whom, Carm. I. xxxiii. Ep. I. iv.)

17. The Carmen Sæculare.

16. Lollius legate in Gaul; his defeat ("Lolliana clades" of Tac. Ann. i. 10.), perhaps alluded to Carm. IV. xiv. 51; and ii. 34.

15. Conquests of Drusus and Tiberius over the Northern and Alpine tribes (Carm. IV. iv. and xiv.: 15 years after the submission of Alexandria, Ib. xiv. 37.)

13. Augustus returns from the frontier in Gaul (Carm. IV. ii. 43.)

8. (In Nov.) Death of Horace, aged 57, and Mæcenas. C. M. Censorino Cos., to whom Carm. IV. viii.

Bentley's computation of the chronology is as follows:—

1st Book of Epistles ,,	20—19.	46–7.
4th Book of Odes and C. Sæculare	17—15.	49—50.

TABLE OF METRES USED BY HORACE.

TEN different metres are found in the first Book; an eleventh is the only variation from the Sapphic and Alcaic system of the second; a twelfth is found in B. III. 12; a thirteenth in B. IV. 7.

The first in order, which comprises also the greatest number of varieties, is

1. THE ASCLEPIAD (named from the lyric poet Asclepiades.)

The lines are all alike

– – – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑

But it is generally allowed now, as a rule, that the system runs (as do the rest) according to stanzas of four lines (τετράστιχα.)

For its violation of this rule, the 8th Ode of the 4th book is supposed incomplete, or interpolated.

In the 1st Ode, B. I, Stallbaum has printed, with some reason, the first and last complete, as the halves of one stanza. This arrangement seems to improve the harmony of sense and metre.

2. A second variety of the Asclepiad is found in Carm. 3.

– – – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑

3. A third Asclepiad, C. 5.

– – – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑ (bis)

– – – ∪ ∪ – –

– – – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑

4. A fourth Asclepiad, C. 6.

– – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑ (ter)

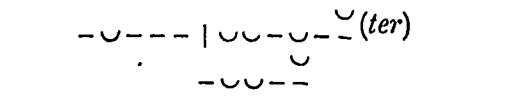
– – – ∪ ∪ – ∪ ⏑

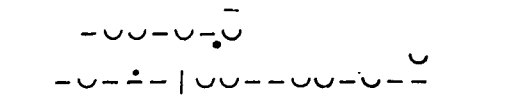
5. A fifth Asclepiad, C. 11. and 18. A tetrameter choriambic (with a half foot at the beginning and end of the verse):

– – | – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ∪ – | – ∪ ⏑

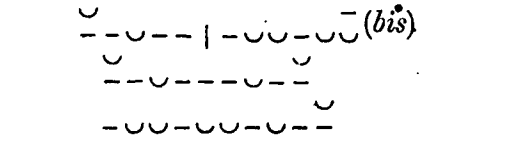
6. The common SAPPHIC stanza, C. 2.



7. Another variety of the Sapphic, C. 8.



8. The common ALCAIC stanza, C. 9.



9. The ALCMANIC (from Alcman, a Spartan lyric poet), C. 7. A dactylic hexameter verse, followed by a tetrameter.

10. HIPPONACTEAN (from Hipponax, more known as the inventor of the Scazon Iambic). A trochaic dimeter catalectic, followed by an iambic trimeter catalectic, C. II. XVIII.

11. The IONIC à minore (⏑⏑– –), C. III. XII. shown by Bentley, in his note, to consist of strophes, or periods of ten feet.

The remaining metres are called ARCHILOCHIAN :—

12. One (the fourth Arch.) is in C. IV.; the first verse consisting of a dactylic tetrameter and three trochees; the second, of a trimeter iambic catalectic.

13. Another (the first Arch.) is in C. IV. VII. consisting of a dactylic hexameter followed by a penthemimer.

Two more varieties of the Archilochian are found in Epod. XI. and XIII.; but the principal metre in the Epodes is the Iambic.

Convenit; hoc etenim sunt omnes jure molesti,
Quo fortes, quibus adversum bellum incidit: inter
Hectora Priamiden animosum atque inter Achillem
Ira fuit capitalis, ut ultima divideret mors,
Non aliam ob causam, nisi quod virtus in utroque
Summa fuit; duo si discordia vexet inertes
Aut si disparibus bellum incidat, ut Diomedi
Cum Lycio Glauco, discedat pigrior ultro
Muneribus missis. Bruto prætore tenente

Persius exponit causam; ridetur ab omni
Conventu: laudat Brutum laudatque cohortem,

Appellat comites, excepto Rege: Canem illum,
Invisum agricolis sidus, venisse; ruebat

LIBER PRIMUS.

I.

PRIMA dicte mihi, summa dicende Camena,
Spectatum satis et donatum jam rude quæris,
Mæcenas, iterum antiquo me includere ludo:
Non eadem est ætas, non mens. Veianius, armis Herculis ad postem fixis, latet abditus agro,
Ne populum extrema totiens exoret harena.
Est mihi purgatam crebro qui personet aurem:
Solve senescentem matre sanus equum, ne
Peccet ad extremum ridendus et ilia ducat.
Nunc itaque et versus et cetera ludicra pono,
Quid verum atque decens curo et rogo et omnis in hoc sum;
Condo et compono, quæ mox depromere possim.
Ac ne forte roges, quo me duce, quo lare tuter;
Nullius addictus jurare in verba magistri,
Quo me cumque rapit tempestas, deferor hospes.
Nunc agilis fio et mersor civilibus undis,
Virtutis veræ custos rigidusque satelles;
Nunc in Aristippi furtim præcepta relabor,
Et mihi res, non me rebus subjungere conor.

dec. C. 4. 7. 14. Scriptor, abhinc annos centum qui decidit, inter Perfectos veteresque referri debet, an inter
Viles atque novos? Excludat jurgia finis.
Est vetus atque probus, centum qui perficit annos.
Quid, qui deperiit minor uno mense vel anno,
Inter quos referendus erit? veteresne poëtas,
An quos et præsens et postera respuat ætas?
Iste quidem veteres inter ponetur honeste,
Qui vel mense brevi vel toto est junior anno.

DE ARTE POETICA LIBER.

Humano capiti cervicem pictor equinam
Jungere si velit et varias inducere plumas
tur. E. 1. 3. 22. Undique collatis membris, ut turpiter atrum Desinat in piscem mulier formosa superne,
Spectatum admissi risum teneatis, amici?
Credite, Pisones, isti tabulæ fore librum
Persimilem, cujus velut ægri somnia vanæ
Fingentur species, ut nec pes nec caput uni
Reddatur formæ. Pictoribus atque poëtis
Quidlibet audendi semper fuit æqua potestas.
Scimus et hanc veniam petimusque damusque vicissim,
Sed non ut placidis coëant immitia, non ut
Serpentes avibus geminentur, tigribus agni.
Inceptis gravibus plerumque et magna professis
Purpureus, late qui splendeat, unus et alter
Assuitur pannus, cum lucus et ara Dianæ
Et properantis aquæ per amœnos ambitus agros,
Rhe. C. 4. 4. 38. Aut flumen Rhenum aut pluvius describitur arcus;
Sed nunc non erat his locus. Et fortasse cupressum

Navibus, ære dato qui pingitur? Amphora cœpit Institui; currente rota cur urceus exit?
Denique sit quidvis simplex dumtaxat et unum.
Maxima pars vatum, pater et juvenes patre digni,
Decipimur specie recti: brevis esse laboro,
Obscurus fio; sectantem levia nervi
Deficiunt animique; professus grandia turget;
Serpit humi tutus nimium timidusque procellæ;
Qui variare cupit rem prodigialiter unam,

NOTES.

Q. HORATI FLACCI CARMINA.

LIBER I.

CARM. I.—AD MÆCENATEM.

Caïus Cilnius Mœcenas. His birthday is celebrated Carm. IV. xi. 18. His ancestry referred to, Carm. III. xxix. 1; Sat. I. vi. 1. The Cilnii were an ancient and leading house at Arretium. Liv. x. 1.

1. Atavis is here taken generally for 'ancestral.' Its exact meaning is seen in a line of Plautus,—'Pater, avos, proavos, abavos (=quartus pater in Virg. Æn. x. 619) atavos, tritavos.' Pers. I. II. The corresponding order in descent would be,—Filius, nepos, pronepos, abnepos, adnepos, trinepos.

3. The sentiment of this ode is summed up in two lines, Sat. II. I. 27, 28; and by Homer in one, if genuine,— ἄλλος γάρ τ' ἄλλοισιν ἀνὴρ ἐπιτέρπεται ἔργοις. Od. ξ 228.

Compare Persius, Sat. v. 52—62:

'Mille hominum species et rerum discolor usus:
'Vellio suum cuique est nec voto vivitur uno:
'Mercibus hic Italis mutat sub sole recenti
'Rugosum piper et pallentis grana cumini;
'Hic satur irriguo mavult turgescere somno;
'Hic Campo indulget, etc.
'At te nocturnis juvat impallescere chartis.'

Compare also Virg. Georg. II. 503—512.

ib. Here follows a description of the various objects of man's ambition: 3—6. The chariot race. 7. Political distinction. 9. Commercial wealth. 11. Home occupations. 15. Mercantile enterprize. 19. Feasts. 23. War. 25. Hunting. 29. Poesy. With the first few lines and their general scope, compare Pindar, Fragm. 139.

ib. Curriculo. 'Curru potius quam in stadio.' Cp. Ov. Trist. IV. VIII. 36. (O.)

ib. Pulverem. Cp. Ov. Met. VII. 542,—'Acer equus quondam magnæque in pulvere famæ.'

4. Fervidis. Cp. Virg. Georg. III. 107,—'Volat vi fervidus axis.' Æn. XI. 195.

ib. Meta.....evitata. Cp. Hom. Il. ψ. 338—341:

ἐν νύσσῃ δέ τοι ἵππος ἀριστερὸς ἐγχριμφθήτω, ὡς ἄν τοι πλήμνῃ γε δοάσσεται ἄκρον ἱκέσθαι κύκλου ποιήτοιο· λίθου δ' ἀλέασθαι ἐπαυρεῖν, μήπως ἵππους τε τρώσῃς κατά θ' ἅρματα ἄξῃς.

6. Terrarum dominos is in apposition with Deos. Ovid has borrowed the phrase, ex Pont. I. IX. 36,—'Terrarum dominos quam colis ipse Deos.' Cp. Cic. Legg. II. 77,—'Dominos esse omnium rerum ac moderatores Deos.' Those who compare Virg. Æn. I. 282,—'Romanos rerum dominos,' fail to observe that that phrase is used of the Roman people collectively: used individually, rerum or terrarum dominī would be improper, or (see Tac. Ann. II. 87) unwelcome to a Roman ear. It is used by Lucan, VIII. 208, of Eastern princes.

7. Hunc. Sc. juvat; (an explanation written above in Hl. C.)

8. Tergeminis, "threefold." The offices of ædile, prætor, consul, which formed the political decursus honorum at Rome.

ib. Honoribus. This has sometimes been explained as a dative case; but that it is an ablative, is clear from the parallel phrase in Sat. I. VI. 11.

10. Libya, the granary of Rome. Cp. Sat. II. III. 87; C. III. XVI. 31.

12. i.e. "by unbounded wealth." Attalus III. king of Pergamus, left the kingdom by will to the Romans, 133 B. C. Cp. Carm. II. XVIII. 5.

14. Myrtoum, the sea S. of Eubœa. Plin. iv. 9. and 18.

15. Icarium mare, 'inter Samum et Myconum.' Ibid.

κύματα μακρὰ θαλάσσης πόντου Ἰκαρίοιο. Hom. Il. β. 145.

..... 'Icarium, lapsas ubi perdidit alas Icarus, et vastæ nomina fecit aquæ.' Ov. Fast. IV. 283.

ib. Africum, the S. W. wind: præceps, Carm. I. iii. 12: creber procellis, Æn. i. 85.

17. Mox reficit rates. Cp. Ov. Trist II. 18,—'Et redit in tumidas naufraga puppis aqua;' and ex Pont. I. v. 35—40:

'Scilicet est cupidus studiorum quisque suorum,
'Tempus et adsueta ponere in arte juvat.
'Saucius ejurat pugnam gladiator, at idem
'Immemor antīqui vulneris, arma capit.
'Nil sibi cum pelagi dicit fore naufragus undis;
'Mox ducit remos, qua modo navis, aqua.'

19. Massici, wine from Mons Massicus in N. Campania.

20. Partem...demere. Comp: II. VII. 6,—'diem mero frangere,' "to break in on the day;" 'tempestivis conviviis,' Cic. pro Archiâ, VI. (the context of which corresponds nearly to this ode.).

Orelli connects this with the subsequent, rather than the preceding, context, and explains it of sleeping. 'Italico more meridiari.' (He objects that tempestiva convivia, 'domi non sub dio celebrabantur.') But a comparison of C. II. III. 6—13, though not excluding this, is against its being the leading idea.

23. Lituus, used by the cavalry, 'acutus est sonus (i.e. "the shrill clarion") tubæ gravis.' Schol. The tuba was a straight trumpet. Ov. Met. I. 98.

24. Matribus detestata. Comp. Virg. Æn. XI. 217; and Æsch. Pers. 245—δεινά τοι λέγοις ἰόντων τοῖς τοκεῦσι φροντίσαι.

25. Sub Jove. "in the open air," as sub divo, Carm. III. II. 5. Comp. Ep. xiii. 2.

Cp. Ὠγρευτὴς..... στίβῃ καὶ νιφετῷ κεχαρημένος. Call. Ep. 32.

29. Hederæ. Ivy, the poet's crown. Virg. Ecl. vii. 25; viii. 13; and Persius, Prol. vi.

29—36. The sense is,—Poetic studies are the charm of my life, and elevate it above the vulgar; and if you allow my claim to the name of poet, I shall be at the summit of my hopes.

34. Lesboum. So I. xxvi. 11; III. xxx. 13,—'Æolium carmen'; referring to Alcæus and Sappho, as his great lyric models. Some suppose a reference to Terpander (also of Lesbos), to whom the special invention of the βάρβιτος is assigned (in a fragment of Pindar, Scolia, v. ed. Diss.)

36. Ov. ex Ponto, II. v. 57; and Met. VII. 61,—'Quo conjuge felix 'Et Dis cara ferar, et vertice sidera tangam.'
Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 322, and Herod. III. 30, and Wesseling's note.

CARM. II.—AD CÆSAREM.

Ad Cæsarem (Augustum C. in an old inscription, the anachronism probably of a copyist). See Chronol. Table, B.C. 27.

Orelli fixes the date of this ode for B.C. 29; and the feeling at Rome, and the honours lavished on Octavius in that year, accord with its general tenor, and the hopes implied in it. See Merivale, Hist. Rome, ch. XXX. p. 401, and note, p. 470.

1. Jam satis. Great storms, followed by an inundation of the Tiber, are here represented as a judgment upon the crimes of the age (v. 21.): appeal is then made to Augustus finally, to show himself the restorer of the Empire.

ib. Nivis. 'Recordemur necesse est in meridionali Italia nivem prodigii instar esse.' (O.)

2. Rubente. 'His red right-hand.' Milton, P.L. ii. 174. Cp. Δία...φοινικοστερόπαν. Pind. Ol. ix. 6; and 'corusca fulmina molitus dextra.' Virg. Georg. I. 328. The combination of lightning, hail, and snow, in one description, occurs in Homer, Il. κ. 5—7.

3. So Ovid, Am. III. III. 35,—'Juppiter ipse suos lucos jaculatus et arces.' Cp. Cicero's verses, de Div. II. 20 (34.)

6. Sæculum Pyrrhæ, the deluge of Deucalion. See Ov. Metam. I. 260.

7. Proteus. Ποσειδάωνὸς ὑποδμώς. Hom. Odyss. IV. 386. 'Pascit sub gurgite phocas.' Virg. Georg. IV. 395.

9. Cp. Ov. Met. I. 296,—'Hic summa piscem deprendit in ulmo.'

13. Tiberim.....undis. These inundations, though not uncommon, were the objects of superstitious regard at Rome. Cicero, describing one, (Ep. ad Quint. III. 7) plays upon the feeling, and quotes Homer, Il. π. 385—9.

14. Litore Etrusco. It is questioned whether these words mean the shore of the Etruscan (i.e. Mediterranean) sea, or, the Etruscan (i.e. the right) bank of the Tiber. The majority of commentators adopt the first meaning: Gesner prefers the last. We may conjecture from its use in Carm. Sæc. 38, that Etruscum litus was sometimes taken popularly to express the border of Etruria on the side of the river, as well as of the sea: it is in fact a natural association, when river and sea are united, to include them in one term. The rest of the sentence certainly suggests rather the rebound of a furious flood from a jutting bank in the bend of a river, than the reflux of a tide of twenty miles. Retorqueo signifies a sudden rapid turn (as contorqueo, in Virg. Æn. III. 562). Moreover, if the flood were caused by the meeting of the waters at the mouth, the retort would come not "from the coast," litore, but "from the sea," æquore. Furthermore, if litore be understood of the right bank, we have the direct antithesis in v. 18, sinistra ripa, and in the latter word a reason for the adoption of litore in this sense, (authorised as it is, in reference to the Tiber, by Virgil, Æn. VIII. 83) viz. that it avoids tautology. I prefer this interpretation, and I see it favoured in Merivale's Rome, ch. xli. p. 533. His description is as follows: 'The masses of water brought down from above (see Tac. Ann. I. 79) 'were flung off from the right bank, where the high grounds descended directly 'into the stream, and driven with increased violence against the left, just at 'the point where nature had left an opening into the heart of the devoted 'city.'

15. Monumenta. Wagner (in his Orthographia Vergiliana) prefers this form to monimenta; 'analogiam secutus, similiter enim documentum scribitur, non docimentum.' Both forms have authority. Keller edits monimenta.

Monumenta . . . Vestæ. The old palace of Numa. Regia, or domus regis, was the official residence of the Pontifex Max.; it was close to the Temple of Vesta. (See, for an account of both, Cookesley's Index and Map of Rome, pp. 46, 47.)

17. Ilia, or Silvia. When condemned by Amulius, and thrown into the river, she became the wife of the river god. 'Post ex fluvio fortuna resistet,'—Ennius, quoted by Niebuhr, Hist. of R. vol. I. p. 175, where also see his explanation of Rhea, or Rea.

18. Sinistra, "the south side," the side of Rome.

19. Jove. The Capitoline Jupiter, the tutelar deity. So Carm. III. v. 12, where 'incolumi Jove' is interpreted by the Scholiast "salvo Capitolio.' So C. IV. xv. 6.

20. Uxorius. Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 266.

22. Persæ. Again, Carm. I. XXI. 15. So Medos, ib. 51; Carm. I. XXIX. 4; and Parthi, I. XII. 53.

These names are all equivalent. The Persæ and Medi were included in the great Parthian Empire, which is identified, in Carm. II. II. 17, with the old Persian Empire.

The dynasties were these:—Cyrus to Darius Codomannus, B.C. 331, a period of 228 years.

Then the Seleucidæ, under the third of whom (Antiochus Theos) Arsaces formed the nucleus of a new power.

The line of Arsacidæ reigned from 250 B.C. to 229 A.D., a period of 480 years, over 18 kingdoms, from the Euphrates to the Ganges, and from the Caspian to the Arabian Sea.

The Arsacidæ were in their turn succeeded by the Second Persian monarchy, and the line of Sassanidæ, from 229 to 651 A.D.

24. Rara, "lessened in number;" i.e. by the havoc of the civil wars.

25. "Whom shall the people invoke, for the safety of the sinking state?" The dative after vocet is peculiar, though to be classed under the general rule of dativus commodi. It occurs in Tibull. II. I. 83,—

'Pecorique vocate
'Voce: palam pecori, clam sibi quisque vocet.'

28. Vestam. Virg. Georg. I. 499,—minus audientem; i.e. indignant at the death of J. Cæsar. Cp. Ov. Fast. III. 697—707. Cæsar's death is again referred to in v. 44.

29. Scelus. Gr. τὸ ἄγος.

31. Hom. Π. o. 308,—

Φοῖβος Ἀπόλλων
εἱμένος ὤμοιιν νεφέλην.

'Kerchiefed in a comely cloud.' Milton, Il Penseroso.

32. Apollo is first invoked (properly so, if Müller is right in the meaning of the name—ἀποτρόπαιος, Dor. vol. i. p. 323), either as the guardian of the Cæsars (see Heyne on Virg. Ecl. IV. 10), or as the god of augury, which is his title here; for the expiation of prodigies, in common with other points of religious ceremonial, belonged to the office of augur.

Ovid (Fast I. 611.) connects augur both with Augustus and augeo, using the verb in the sense of promoting the empire's prosperity.

33. Erycina, Venus; so called from M. Eryx in Sicily. See Virg. Æn. v. 759. Ov. Am. III. IX. 45.

ib. Ridens. φιλομμείδης Ἀφροδίτη. Hom. Il. γ. 424.

37. Satiate, "you who have indulged to the full"...nearly as ἄδην ἔλειξεν αἵματος, in Æsch. Agam. 828. Cp. the Homeric epithet ἄτος πολέμοιο. Il. ε. 388.

38. Clamor is personified in Pindar, Fragm. Inc. 187,—κλῦθ' Ἀλαλὰ πολέμου θύγατερ.

ib. Leves. Mitsch. Cp. Statius Theb. II. 710, describing a trophy—

'Huic loves galeas perfossaque vulnere crebro
'Inserit arma furens; huic truncos ictibus enses
'Subligat, et fractas membris spirantibus hastas.'

'Unde apparet, galeas leves esse telorum ac gladiorum ictibus detritas.' (Ang. "battered.") Levis may very well be synonymous with detritus. See Ov. Met. XIII. 792,—'Levior assiduo detritis æquore conchis.' Where is it used in the signif. "burnished, bright?" In the only passages where Virgil uses it of armour, it appears to mean non asper, i. e. without "graving or device." See Æn. VII. 626, 634, 789; VIII. 624. Levia, in C. II. VII. 21, is explained by O. as 'detersa ac polita;' by M. as exple levia, ut superficies levis sit, i.e. fill up to the brim; but the word is a simple epithet of metal.

39. Mauri peditis. Gesn. and Orell. suggest that this may mean a Moor fighting on foot, after his horse is slain—an emblem of desperate courage (such as Witherington's in "Chevy Chase"), and possibly taken from a picture. Cavalry are mentioned as dismounting on an emergency in battle, in Livy II. 20; IV. 38 and 40 ('equitem ad pedes deduxeris.') So Virg. Æn. X. 366. So Herod. I. 80.

40. Voltus. In this and the like words volgus, volnus, I follow Orelli's text, and retain the older form: yet the common forms vultus, etc. which I place among the various readings, had come into use as early as Quintilian's time. He says of them (I. IV. 11) 'nunc scribitur vulgus et servus,' (not servos.) He gives (I. VII. 26) the reason for the old form, 'quia subjecta sibi vocalis in unum sonum coalescere et confundi nequiret;' i. e. the Romans had a difficulty in pronouncing uu, whether as a diphthong (e.g. in quum, equus) or as, in Quintilian's phrase, litteræ sibi insidentes; i.e. bearing one on the other, with a consonantal power given to the first letter.

The same peculiarity held in the letter i; thus, abicere, or else abjecere, is an older form than abjicere. On the other hand, where i came between vowels, as in aio, Maia, (which Cicero is said to have written aiio, Mariia) there was iotacismus, or doubling of the i in pronunciation. Wagner quotes as the rule, unam i scribi, duplicem audiri. Augustus is said (Suet. 88) to have favoured the phonetic principle, 'perinde scribendum ac loquamur.' (See the Orthogr. Verg. p. 443, and 445.)

41. Juvenem, used as in Virg. Ecl. I. 43, Georg. I. 500: an ascription perhaps of perpetual youth to Augustus, as to a divinity. The whole stanza, with its context, is in a strain of most refined adulation (to be compared with the beginning and the end of Virgil's first Georgic), implying that he, to whose government they look for redress and remedy of the state's sufferings, is really more than man, and but lent to the earth for a time. Perhaps it is as the author of civilisation (Carm. x. 2) that he is thus identified with Mercury.

44. Cp. Ov. Fast. III. 710,—'Hæc prima elementa fuerunt
'Cæsaris, ulcisci justa per arma patrem.'

45—6. Comp. Ov. Metam. XV. 868; Ov. Trist. V. II. 52.

47. Iniquum, i. e. from disgust at the wickedness of the world.

50. Pater. 'Pater urbium,' Carm. III. XXIV. 27. Cp. Ov. Fast. II. 127, (and see Paley's note.)

'Sancte Pater Patriæ, tibi plebs, tibi Curia nomen
'Hoc dedit, hoc dedimus nos tibi nomen eques.'

Cp. Sueton, Oct. C. 58.

ib. Princeps. Ibid. 142,—

'Tu (sc. Romulus) domini nomen, principis ille tenet.'

Cp. Tac. Ann. I. 1,—'Cuncta discordiis civilibus fessa nomine Principis sub imperium accepit.' Compare too (Ann. II. 57) the antithesis between principis Romani and Parthi regis.

CARM. III.—AD VIRGILIUM.

1. Sic, "on this condition;" "so may the gods guide your course, as you restore him safe."

ib. Diva potens Cypri. The gen. governed by potens. Venus is invoked for a fair passage in Solon, Fr. X:

αὐτὰρ ἐμὲ ξὺν νῆϊ θοῇ κλεινῆς ἀπὸ νήσου ἀσκηθῆ πέμποι Κύπρις ἰοστέφανος.

So Neptune says, Virg. Æn. V. 800,— 'Fas omne est, Cytherea, meis te fidere regnis

'Unde genus ducis.'

Cp. Ov. Epist. XV. 213; XVI. 24.

2. Fratres Helenæ, Castor and Pollux.

Cp. Ov. Fast. V. 720,—'Utile sollicitæ sidus uterque rati;' and Eur. Orest. 1636, where Helen is joined with her brothers as ναυτίλοις σωτῆριοι. (Cp. also v. 1689.)

The Dioscuri seem to have often supplied a name and figure-head for ships; e. g. on St. Paul's voyage, S. S. Acts XXVIII. 11.

4. Iapyx, the wind blowing from Iapygia, the north-west; therefore, in this case, a favourable wind.

5. Creditum. So Catull. LXIV. 213, 'concrederet.'

5—8. Navis.....animæ dimid. Comp. Call. Fr. 114.

6. Debes. Cp. 'debent hæc pignora Daphnim,' Virg. Ecl. VIII. 93.

8. Call. Ep. 42; and Ov. ex Ponto, I. VIII. 2,—'Pars animæ magna, Severe, meæ.'

9. Illi robur et æs. Cp. Æsch. P. V. 242: σιδηρόφρων τε κἀκ πέτρας εἰργασμένος; and Ov. Fast. V. XII. 11,—'Valido pectus mihi robore fultum.'

13. Decertantem. De in composition means down, and so to the end through, or thoroughly, or constantly; e. g. delitigo, depugno, debello, decoquo, (Sat. II. I. 74,) decanto, (C. I. XXXIII. 3,) decoloro, (C. II. I. 35.)

14. Tristes Hyades.

'Ora micant Tauri septem radiantia flammis
'Navita quas Hyadas Graius ab imbre vocat.' Ov. Fast. V. 165.

Virgil, alluding to the same derivation (ὕειν, pluere,) calls them pluvias, Æn. III. 516.

18. Siccis. As Æsch. S. C. Th. 696, ξηροῖς ἀκλαύστοις ὄμμασι (quoted by Orelli.) Tears in the ancient poets betoken not compassion chiefly, as in modern writers, but fear or horror. See Eur. Herc. Fur. 1354: οὔτ' ἀπ' ὀμμάτων ἔσταξα πηγὰς.....Bentley reads 'rectis oculis,' quoting parallel instances; to which Porson, in Addendis on Hecuba 966, has added several more.

ib. Monstra. Juven. XIV. 283,—'Oceani monstra et juvenes vidisse marinos.'

20. Acroceraunia. A headland of Epirus, famous for storms. Der. κεραυνός. 'Alta Cerraunia,' Virg. Georg. I. 332. Used proverbially,—'hæc Acroceraunia vita.' Ov. Rem. Am. 739.

21. Abscidit. Ov. Met. I. 22, uses this phrase, but with a difference, applying it to the severance of land and water,—'terris abscidit undas.' On the form nequiquam, see Wagner, Orthogr. v.

22. Oceano dissociabili. "Has separated continents by means of the Ocean, disuniting them."

Dissoc. used actively. So in Lucret. I. 11, genitabilis; in Ov. Met. XIII. 837, and Virg. Georg. I. 93, penetrabilis. So placabilis="conciliatory:" in Ter. Ad. IV. III. 17: laudabilis="complimentary." Cic. Epist. XV. 6.

26. Cp. Ov. Am. III. IV. 9,—

'Ipsa potestas
'Semina nequitiæ languidiora facit.'

'Nitimur in vetitum semper, cupimusque negata.'

27. Cp. Hesiod. ἔργα κ. ἡμ. 50, and v. 102.

ib. Iapeti g., "Prometheus." See Æsch. P.V. 252, πῦρ ἐγώ σφιν ὤπασα; and for the benefits and inventions assigned to him, see vv. 250, 457—468, 482, sq. See also below, Carm. XVI. 13: Προμηθεύς, "possessed of forethought," Æsch. P.V. 36, his brother, Ἐπιμηθεύς, "afterthought."

30. Febrium...cohors. Cp. νούσων ἑσμός, Æsch. Suppl. 684. Juvenal, describing the weaknesses of age, says

'Circumsilit agmine facto
'Morborum omne genus.' S. X. 218.

Cp. Milton, P. L. XI. 474:

'Diseases dire, of which a monstrous crew
'Before thee shall appear..... v. 494.
'Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long
'Dry-eyed behold?'

Cp. Gray's Ode on Eton Coll.— 'A grisly troop,
'The painful family of Death.'

31. Incubuit. So Lucret. VI. 1143.

32. i. e. The duration of man's life was shortened. Semoti and prius tarda express the same idea: "Death, which seemed at a distance, and (therefore) slow in its approach, quickened its pace."

ib. Necessitas leti, poet. for letum. Gr. ἀναγκαῖον ἦμαρ.

34. Dædalus. Virg. Æn. VI. 14; Ov. A. A. II. 21, sqq.

35. Non homini, i. e. "not meant for man."

36. Herculeus labor. Gr. βίη Ἡρακληείη, Hom. Od. λ. 600. But Orelli interprets,—'Hercules, qui omnes labores fortiter exantlavit.' With the mention of him, Cp. Moschus, in Bione, 119,— καταβὰς ποτὶ Τάρταρον ὥς ποκ' Ὀδυσσεὺς, ὡς πάρος Ἀλκείδας.

40. Iracunda. ἔγχεος ζακότοιο. Pind. Nem. VI. 55.

CARM. IV.—AD L. SESTIUM.

Lucius Sestius was consul suffectus, in the room of Augustus, B. C. 23.

1. Veris et Favoni, (ver. 5) "Cytherea." Cp. Lucret. I. 10—13, and V. 736,—'It 'Ver et Venus et veris prænuntius ante Pennatus graditur Zephyrus.'

2. Trahunt, i. e. deducunt, "draw down and launch." Cp. ἑρύσσαμεν εἰς ἅλα δῖαν, (sc. νῆα.) Hom. Od. λ. 2. Conversely, Musæus (Hero, 298*)* indicates the approach of winter by ἤδη νῆα μέλαιναν ἀνέλκυσε διχθάδι χέρσῳ.

ib. Machinæ=phalangæ. Gr. ὄλκοι, a kind of "rollers."

7. Dum graves, etc. 'Vulcanus nempe dum uxor ejus adest in terris et omnia vi sua fecundat.....suo quoque operi intentus est.' [Doer.] [O.] quotes a Scholiast,—'Vulcanus procudit fulmina Jovi quæ in æstate mittat.'

8. Officina. An abbreviation from opificina, properly an adj. form. Comparo tonstrina, "a barber's shop." So pistrina, medicina, carnificina.

10. Solutæ. So resolvit, Virg. Georg. I. 44.

11. Fauno. Ov. Fast. II. 193.

ib. Immolare...agna. Orell. cf. Virg. Ecl. III. 77, 'faciam vitulâ;' and Cic. de Legg. II. 12. So in Verr. II. I. 26, 'poscunt majoribus poculis.'

15. Spem...longam, "which looks far forward," "requires a long time to mature it." So Carm. XI. 7,—Spatio brevi spem longam reseces, i.e. "since time is so short, curtail your schemes." Comp. Carm. II. XVI. 17. The old man is described Ars Post. 172, as 'spe longus.'

16. Fabulæ=res nihili. ὦ Χαρίκλεια τί τὰ νέρθε; Πολὺς σκότος· αἰδὼ ἄνοδοι τί; Ψεῦδος· ὁ δὲ Πλούτων; Μῦθος. Call. Ep. 14. 'Cinis et manes et fabula fies' ("a heap of dust, a shade, an empty sound," Gifford transl.) Pers. V. 152.

17. Domus exilis="the joyless house of Pluto," whether as in E. I. VII. 45, "poorly furnished," or "tenanted by ghosts." Exilis means "meagre, thin;" hence, as ἀμενηνός, "unsubstantial death." Shakesp. Romeo and Juliet, Act V. Sc. III. Virg. Æn. VI. 269,— 'Domos Ditis vacuas et inania regna.'

For the double epithet, compare E. II. I. 157, and Virg. Æn. X. 408,—'Horrida per latos acies Vulcania campos.' Cp. also Æn. VI. 603.

ib. Cp. Theogn. 973,— οὐδεὶς ἀνθρώπων ὃς, ἐπεὶ ποτε γαῖα καλύψῃ εἰς σ' Ἔρεβος καταβῇ δῶμά τε Περσεφόνης Τέρπεται, &c. τ. λ.

18. Regna vini, i. e. the post of rex or arbiter bibendi, Carm. II. VII. 25; president of the feast.

ib. Talis, i.e. "by the dice." See the word 'Tali' in Dict. Antiq. (and note on C. III. XXIV. 58.) "When you have once gone thither, you shall no more take part in feasts."

CARM. V.—AD PYRRHAM.

Cowley has paraphrased this Ode.

1. Cp. Aristoph. Fragm. Æol. 116,—ἐν ἡδυόσμοις στρώμασιν παννυχίζων: Martial, VIII. LXXXVII. 2,—'Liber, in æterna vivere digne rosa.' Cicero, de Fin. II. 20, has 'potantem in rosâ Thorium,' i.e. "crowned with roses;" but here it is "on a bed of roses:" and so Milton's transl.: 'Courts thee on roses.'

2. Urget. On the form of this word, see Wagn. Orth., and Forbiger on Geor. I. 146.

4. Flavam[ξανθός,]"your fair hair;" a beauty in Greek or Italian eyes, by contrast with their naturally dark complexion.

5. Munditiis. Cp. 'Munditiis capimur,' Ov. A. A. III. 133, and II. 677. Gr. καθαριότητι, Xen. Mem. II. I. 22.

11. Auræ. 'Incenta Cupidinis aura,' Ov. Am. II. IX. 33. [M.] compares, generally, the description of Helen, as φρόνημα νηνέμου γαλάνας, Æsch. Ag. 740.

13, sqq. "I have experienced and escaped the snare; and, like a shipwrecked mariner, have hung up the tokens of my escape in Neptune's temple." For this practice, see on Ars Poet. 20. Cp. Virg. Æn. XII. 769,—'Votas suspendere vestes.' So Juv. XII. 27.

16. Maris, gov. by potenti, as Carm. I. III. 1,—'potens Cypri;' and I. VI. 10,—'lyræ potens.'

CARM. VI.—AD AGRIPPAM.

Marcus Vipsanius Agrippa. The First General and Minister of the Emperor; also his son-in-law.

1. Vario...M. c. alite, i.e. the great Epic poet. Cp. Sat. I. X. 43. Scriberis a Vario might have been expected; but the omission gives it the construction of the abl. absolute; i.e. 'cum Varius sit insignis poeta.' With this construction [O.] compares E. I. I. 94. Add C. II. IV. 10,—'Thessalo victore.' Paley's note on Ovid, Fast. II. 85, may be referred to.

3. Navibus . . . equis, "by sea or land."

5. Neque hæc.....nec gravem, i.e. "achievements such as yours are a subject for Epic or Tragic poetry; as those of Achilles, Ulysses, and the destinies of the house of Pelops." Orelli supposes an allusion, in v. 8., to Varius' play of Thyestes.

ib. 'Fortia Mæonio gaudent pede bella referri,' etc. Ov. R. Am. 373. So Call. Fr. 165.

6. Nescii. So Ov. Her. XII. 49,—'succumbere nescia somno;' and in prose, Liv. IX. 3,—'quiescere nesciat.' Virg. Æn. XII. 527,—'nescia vinci pectora.'

7. Duplicis, "crafty." οὐ διπλοῦς πέφυκ' ἀνήρ. Eur. Rhe. 395: in converse sign., simplex,— 'Sino fraude dolisque, Innocuum, simplex.' Ov. Met. XV. 121.

11. Cp. Ov. Trist. II. 335.

13. Tunica tect. ad., "in his shirt of mail;" a transl. of the Homeric χαλκεοθώρηξ, χαλκοχίτων.

15. Merionen. See Hom. Il. θ. 264; ν. 528.

16. Tydiden. Hom. Il. η. 335. and 855; his combats with Venus and Mars.

CARM. VII.—AD MUNATIUM PLANCUM.

For the supposed political reference of this ode, see Merivale, Hist. Rome, ch. XLI. vol. IV. p. 595. For an account of Plancus, see Biogr. Dict.

1. Rhodon, aut Mytilenen. Mentioned together again in Epist. I. II. 17, as unattractive, 'incolumi,' i.e. to any but an invalid in body or mind. Gesn. Cp. Cic. Fam. IV. 7, and VII. 3, to show that they were a favourite resort of exiles.

2. Ephesus, now Ayasaluk.

2. Bimaris Cor. δίπορος, Eur. Troad. 1097; ἀμφιθάλασσος, Pind. Ol. VII. 33; between the Sinus Corinthiacus and Saronicus.
Bimaris is a word occurring in no other good writer except Ovid, Her. XII. 27,—'Hic Ephyren bimarem.' Met. VI. 419,—'bimari clauduntur ab isthmo.'

3. Soph. Antig. 153,—ὁ Θήβας ἐλελίχθων Βάκχιος.

ib. Apolline Delphos. Eur. Ion, 5,—

Δελφῶν τήνδε γῆν Ἵν' ὄμφαλον μέσον καθίζων Φοῖβος ὑμνῳδεῖ βροτοῖς.

4. Tempe. Eur. Troad. 214,—τὰν Πηνειοῦ σεμνὰν χώραν κρηπῖδ' Οὐλύμπου καλλίσταν, where also, vv. 218, 219, (as may be implied here in 'unum opus est') the first place is given to Attica,—Θησέως ζαθέαν χώραν...

5. The pride of others is, in a set poem to celebrate Athens (or Attica,) and to gain an olive-wreath from every part of it; i.e. from every legend to gain poetic fame.

ib. Intactæ, i.e. 'virgineæ;' as in Virg. Æn. I. 345.

6. Perpetuo. Ov. Met. I. 4,—'Ad mea perpetuum deducite tempora carmen.' Cp. 'perpetua historia,' Cic. Fam. V. 12.

7. Undique decerptam. Bentley and others explain this of a worn-out hackneyed subject, an olive tree stripped of its leaves by every poet,—"plucked on all hands." So Conington. So, 'des rameaux de l' olivier tant de fois cueillis,' Walckenaer, livre V. s. 25. I prefer Orelli's interpretation, which is given on v. 5, as more natural in construction, more in agreement with the epithet of v. 6. A continuous, comprehensive poem would gather up the traditions of every period, and the associations of every spot around.

ib. Olivam. The wreath for literary merit was properly of ivy, as in C. I. I. 29. Here it is supposed to be of olive, as being conferred by Pallas, or derived from her. Similarly the muse of the love-poet is crowned with myrtle (as sacred to Venus) in Ov. A. A. I. I. 29.

8. Pind. Nem. X. 2,—Ἥρας δῶμα Θεοπρεπές. Comp. Hom. Il. δ. 51, 52.

9. Aptum...equis,—ἱππόβοτον, Hom. Il. β. 287.

ib. Mycenas dites,—πολυχρύσους, Hom. Il. η. 180; and Soph. Elect. 9.

10. Patiens Lacedæmon. 'Pueri Spartiatæ non ingemiscunt ... laniati,' Cic. Tusc. Disp. V. 27.

11. Larissæ...opimæ. ἐριβώλακα, Hom. Il. β. 841.

ib. Percussit, "charms."

10, 11. Cp. Pind. Pyth. X. 1,—ὀλβία Λακεδαίμων μάκαιρα Θεσσαλία.

12. Walckenaer (liv. V. s. 25) says on this,—'La grotte retentissante' (resonantis, Cp. Virg. Æn. VII. 83) 'de la nymphe Albunée est ou la grotte dite de Neptune, 'ou le temple dit de la Sibylle dont on voit les ruines; l'eau du fleuve, encore 'aujourd'hui, bouillonne autours de sa base et s'échappe en cascades.'

13. Anio, Teverone.

ib. Tiburnus, with his brothers (Carm. I. XVIII. 2; Virg. Æn. VII. 671), founded it.

ib. Lucus, i.e. Tibur (Tivoli, 20 miles from Rome, Mart. IV. LVII. 4,—'Quo te bis decimus ducit ab urbe lapis.') Not all these places of legendary or historic fame equal it in the poet's eyes. Cp. Carm. II. VI. 5.

15. Albus. See Il. λ. 306,—Ζέφυρος νέφεα στυφελίξῃ Ἀργέσταο Νότοιο, which marks the epithet as expressive of the white fleecy clouds which accompany westerly or N.W. winds. Ovid uses the Gr. name Argestes for the N.W. wind, in Fast. V. 161.

21. Teucer. See his exile and its reasons anticipated in Soph. Ajax, 1006—1019. Eurip. Hel. 90. Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 620.

23. Populea. Sc. 'magni memor Herculis,' as in C. IV. V. 36. 'Herculi vago (C. III. III. 9) potissimum libat.' Cp. τῷ ἡγεμόνι Ἡρακλεῖ, Xen. An. VI. II. 9. [O.] So ἡγερόσυνα are offered to Hercules, Xen. An. IV. VIII. 25.

28. Eurip. Hel. 148,—

Κύπρον οὗ μ' ἐθέσπισεν οἰκεῖν Ἀπόλλων ὄνομα νησιωτικὸν Σαλαμῖνα θέμενον.

29. i.e. That the new Salamis shall so rival the old, as to make it doubtful, in mentioning the name, which is meant. Cp. 'prolem ambiguam,' Virg. Æn. III. 180.

30. Cp. Odyss. ε. 253,—ἤδη γὰρ μάλα πόλλ' ἔπαθον, imitated in Sat. II. v. 21; Virg. Æn. I. 199,—'O passi graviora.'

CARM. VIII.—AD LYDIAM.

The general sentiment of this Ode is expressed in the opening of the Two Gentlemen of Verona,—

'Wer't not affection chains thy tender days
'To the sweet glances of thy honoured love...
'Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.'

4. Campum, the Campus Martius. See Cookesley's Map of Rome and Index, and the Dictionary of Antiquities.

ib. Patiens...solis. Cp. Gr. ἡλιωμένος, and its opposite, ἐσκιατροφηκώς. See also Eur. Bacch. 457—9.

6. Lupatis adj. of lupus, "a sharp bit." Ov. Trist. IV. VI. 4.

11. Bracchia. The quantity of this word is transposed from that of its root βραχίων: hence the doubling of the c, as authorised by MSS. Wagn. Orthog.

14. Ov. Art. Am. I. 689,—'Achilles Veste virum longa dissimulatus erat,' (sc. in aula Lycomedis.)

ib. Trojæ funera. Lucret. V. 326.

CARM. IX.—AD THALIARCHUM.

Thaliarchus, θαλίαρχος=arbiter bibendi. The office implied in this name was a Greek innovation upon that of 'pater cenæ,' Sat. II. VIII. 7. See Merivale, Hist. Rome, ch. XLI. p. 554, who quotes 'magisteria a majoribus instituta,' from Cic. Senect. 14.

The ode is an imitation of Alcæus, Fr. 34,—

Ἄγει μὲν ὁ Σδεὺς ἐκ δ' ὀρανῶ μέγαν χειμών, πεπάγασιν δ' ὑδάτων ῥοαί.
κάββαλλε τὸν χειμῶν' ἐπὶ μὲν τίθεις πῦρ ἐν δὲ κίρναις οἶνον ἀφειδέως.

2. Soracte. 'Sancti Soractis,' Virg. Æn. II. 785. About 25 miles N. of Rome, in the Faliscan territory, now M. St. Oreste. It stands out (stet,) especially in the atmosphere of winter, sharply and prominently to view from either of the northern gates. Cp. 'stet Marpesia cautes.' Virg. Æn. VI. 471.

4. Constiterint. Cp. 'ter frigore constitit Ister.' Ov. Trist V. X. 1.

5. This sentence expresses the same meaning as the Fragment of Lucilius,—'Scinde, puer, calam, ut caleas.' Calam. κᾶλον, "a log;" whence calo, E. I. XIV. 42.

7. Quadrimum. τετραέτες δὲ πίθων ἀπελύετο κρατὸς ἄλειφαρ. Theocr. VII. 147.

b. Sabina, i.e. the wine was Sabine.

8. Diota, a vessel with two handles, (ὦτα). Cp. the adj. ὠτώεις, Hom. Il. ψ. 264. ἀμφώης, Theocr. I. 28.

9. From Archilochus, Fr. 51,— τοῖς Θεοῖς τιθεῖν ἀπάντα· πολλάκις μὲν ἐκ κακῶν ἄνδρας ὀρθοῦσιν μελαίνῃ κειμένους ἐπὶ χθονί.

Cp. Æsch. Pers. 229,—πάντα θήσομεν θεοῖσι.

11. Deprœliantes. The de is probably intensive, as in C. I. III. 13. Parry, on Ter. Ad. I. II. 72, defervisse, suggests that it may be construed "ceasing to rage."

14. Quem...dierum. A partitive construction, emphasizing the idea of portions of time, day by day, doled out to men.

ib. Lucro appone, "set it down as so much gain."

16. Puer=dum puer es. V. Schol.

18. Areæ, "public places," the pleasures of society.

21. Latentis proditor. Cp. Virg. Ecl. III. 65,— 'Et fugit ad salices, et se cupit ante videri.'

24. Male pertinaci, "feebly resisting."

CARM. X.—AD MERCURIUM.

1—4. Cp. Ov. Fast. V. 663—8:

'Clare nepos Atlantis ades, quem montibus olim
'Edidit Arcadiis Pleïas una Jovi:
'Pacis et armorum superis imisque Deorum
'Arbiter, alato qui pede carpis iter;
'Læte lyræ pulsu, nitida quoque læte palæstra
'Quo didicit culte lingua favente loqui.'

4. Palœstræ. Chishull cp. Pind. Isth. I. 60,—ἀγώνιος Ἑρμᾶς. The Palæstra of the ancients might (as in Gesner's note) be paralleled with our dancing school, and Johnson's sarcasm on 'the manners of a dancing master' has a counterpart in Cicero's (de Off. I. 36) 'palæstrici motus.'

6. Numtium. διάκτορος Ἀργειφόντης. Hom. Od. ε. 43,—'Interpres Divum.' Virg. Æn. IV. 356. Cp. V. 238, sqq.

ib. Lyræ parentem. ὃς χέλυν Ἑρμάων, κιθάραν ὡς αὐτὸς Ἀπόλλων. Bion, Id. III. 5. Cp. Ov. Fast. V. 104.

9. Te, boves olim. Taken from Homer's Hymn to Mercury; or more immediately perhaps from Alcæus, Frag. IV. See also Ov. Met. II. 686.

ib. Nisi reddidisses. The construction is dependent on terret, used of past time.

11. Dum terret. It is to be observed that dum, "while," (i.e. when expressing simultaneous coincident action) is properly followed by a present indicative, without regard to the tense of the leading verb. See for instance C. III. VII. 18; III. XI. 24; S. I. V. 72; A P. 465. A good example of the construction after an imperfect is in Tac. Ann. I. 75,—'Dum veritati consulitur libertas corrumpebatur,'. ("while the interests of truth were promoted, liberty was being undermined.") Cp. Virg. G. IV. 560. So after a pluporfect, Ov. Fast. III. 40,—'Implêrat dum sua visa refert.' Cp. Virg. Ec. VII. 6. The exceptions to the above rule are few, and may be explained. In Tibull. II. III. 21, 'caneret dum' is probably a false reading, (see Bach's note) for 'cum.' In Sallust Cat. 7, 'dum . . . . faceret,' the reading is doubtful; but the present tense could not stand in a sentence so indefinite. In Sueton. Aug. 94, 'dum ceteræ dormirent obdormisse' seems exceptional. In Livy, XXIV. 40, 'dum . . . . inspiceret' is=quoad, expressing continued action. So in Hor. C. I. XXXVII. 6;

in Cic. Rosc. Am. 32, 'dum . . . erat occupatus, the particle seems not to express time, but rather cause; not, "while he was," but, "owing to his having been, preoccupied." (So, perhaps, ad Att. I. 16, 'dum veritus est.') In Ov. Met. XV. 847, 'dum tulit' may perhaps be accounted for by its close dependence on 'intulit,' in the preceding verse. In Virg. G. IV. 457, 'dum' is= 'dummodo,' expressing cause or purpose. In Cic. Fin. II. 13, 'dum...voluerunt,' it may be stated as a rule, that the perfect, with "have," follows the construction of the present tense, but there is a distinction in meaning: 'dum volunt' would be="in laying down this principle;" 'dum voluerunt' is="in having laid it down." (See Madvig, Lat. Gr. s. 336, obs. 2.)

13. Hom. Il. ω. 384, sqq. 15. Trojæ. Dat. case.

16. Fefellit, passed unnoticed through the watchfires of the Myrmidons.

17. This alludes to Mercury's office as ψυχοπόμπος, πομπαῖος, χθόνιος. Soph. Ajax, 832.

18. Virga...aurea. The caduceus (ῥάβδος.) Hence his title χρυσόραπις, Hom. Od. ε. 87; Pind. Pyth. IV. 178. So Ov. Her. XVI. 64. Cp. Spenser's (F. Qu. III. XII. 41) description of 'Caduceus, the rod of Mercury,' &c.

CARM. XI.—AD LEUCONOËN.

1. Ne quæsieris. The following are phrases of prohibition nearly synonymous: ne quære, (in poetry;) ne quæsieris; noli quærere, as Epist. I. XVIII. 28; fuge quærere, Carm. I. IX. 13; parce quærere, Carm. III. VIII. 26; remitte quærere, Carm II. XI. 3; and omitte quærere, Carm. III. XXIX. 11, in the sense of "discontinuing." Cave quæras, or quærere, may be used.

2. Babylonios...numeros. The calculations of Chaldæan astrologers. Compare S.S. Isaiah, XLVII. 13.) Cp. 'Chaldæorum promissa,' Cic. Tusc. Qu. I. 40. Juv. VI. 553,—

'Chaldæis sed major erit fiducia; quidquid
'Dixerit astrologus credent a fonte relatum
'Hammonis.' And v. 373,—
... 'In manibus, ceu pinguia sucina, tritas
'Cernis ephomeridas.' And v. 576,—
... 'Non ibit numeris revocata Thrasylli.'

7. Dum loquimur. So Ov. Pont. IV. III. 58,—'Dum loqueris, fieri tristia posse puta.'

4. Imago, i. e. vocis; as in Virg. Georg. IV. 50. In the Greek Epigram,— Ἠχὼ πετρήεσσαν.....

παντοίων στομάτων λάλον εἰκόνα.

5. Helicon, in Bœotia, now Zagora.

6. Pindus, running from north to south, from the Cambunian range to that of Parnassus.

ib. Hæmus. The great northern boundary of Thrace, the Balkan.

9. Arte materna, "taught by his mother Calliope." Virg. Ecl. IV. 56.

11. Blandum...ducere. The inf. after adjectives (a Greek construction) is common with Horace. With similar license, v. 2, celebrare is for celebrandum.

13. Cp. Virg. Ecl. III. 60. 14. Virg. Æn: I. 230.

ὡς ὅτε δένδρεον ἄσσει.

45—48. M. Claud. Marcellus. Virg. Æn. VI. 856. Five times consul, victorious at Nola, conqueror of Syracuse. "His fame (crescit) is sustained still;" an especial compliment to the young Marcellus, husband of Julia (see the well-known Æn. VI. 870, 884,) to whom by some the phrase Julium sidus is thought to refer, on account of his marriage with Julia. Others refer it to the whole gens Julia, but most to Julius Cæsar. Perhaps the phrase was chosen as designedly equivocal, and capable of various or wider application. It is observed by Orelli, how rarely there is mention in Horace or Virgil of Julius Cæsar, as if such mention might give umbrage to Augustus.

47. Sidus. This may be merely a metaphor, as in Ovid, Trist. II. 167,—'Sidus juvenile, nepotes;' and again, Pont. III. III. 27,—'O sidus Fabiæ, Maxime, gentis, ades.' But it is more probably an allusion (as in Virgil, Ecl. IX. 47; Æn. VIII. 681; and Propert. IV. VI. 59) to the comet which was seen during the games of Venus Genetrix, held by Augustus in commemoration of Jul. Cæsar. '(Sidus crinitum per septem dies.....conspectum:... .....significari 'vulgus credidit Cæsaris animam inter Deorum immortalium numina receptam.' Plin. N. H. II. 23; Cp. Sueton. J. C. 88.) Henceforth a star was set on the forehead of Cæsar's statue in the Forum.

48. Sappho, Fragm. 3,—

51. Justo, "regular, full, complete," in which senses this adj. is attached to such nouns as exercitus, legio, acies, prælium, victoria. Such is the sense in which 'justo Marte' has been conjecturally (but improperly) read in C. IV. II. 14.

55. Subjectos...oræ, "under the edge, or extremity, of the East." Cp. Ov. Trist. I. III. 19,—'Libycis aberat diversa sub oris.' Virg. G. III. 381,—'Septem subjecta Trioni Gens.'

56. Seras et Indos. Virg. Georg. II. 122—4,—'Extremi sinus orbis.'

4. Hom. Il. ι. 642,—οἰδάνεται κραδίη χόλῳ.

6. Manet. Orelli supports the reading manent, inconsistently with his own remark on Carm. I. XXIV. 8. Bentley considers it a mere copyist's correction, and shows that the Latin usuage does not admit a plural verb after nouns coupled by negatives. Madvig quotes (Lat. Gr. s. 213*)* an exception, from Terence, Ad. I. II. 23, where the nominatives are of different persons. His quotation of Cicero is at least doubtful. An instance of the construction in Greek may be found in Eur. Alcest. 360, quoted by Porson on Hec. 86. Instances of ἠ.....ἠ, followed by a plural, are found in Hom. Il. v. 138; Æsch. Suppl. 727. As an instance of Horatian usage, comp. C. III. x. 16,—'curvat.'

ib. Humor. Wagner writes 'umor, umidus:' but Varro (de L. Lat. v. 241*)* retains the aspirate, deriving the word from 'humus.' His authority is good for the fact, if not for the root. If the true root is χέω, χυμός, there is reason for the h.

8. Macera. Used again, Epod. XIV. 16. Properly, "to soften by steeping;" hence, "to waste or wear away." Cp. Theocr. III. 17,—ἔρωτα.....
ὅς με κατασμύχων καὶ ἐς ὀστέον ἄχρις ἰάπτει.

And,— 'Like covered fire,

12. Cp. Ov. Am. I. VII. 41; and Tibull. I. VI. 14,—'livor,' (i.e. "the livid mark,") 'abiret Quem facit impresso mutua dente Venus.'

15. Catul. XCIX. 2,—'Saviolum dulci dulcius ambrosia.'

16. Quinta parte, may be represented by "quintessence," the modern, but obsolete term of chemistry, expressing spirit rectified to the utmost, (i.e. the essence from five distillations.) The phrase in Horace is probably adapted from the Aristotelian notion of τὸ πέμπτη οὐσία, (the 'quintum genus e quo essent astra mentesque.' Cic. Acad. I. 8; where see Davis' note,) viz. "a fifth and superior element or essence," the etherial.

17. This may be taken from Homer Od. ζ. 181,— ὁμοφροσύνην ὀπάσειαν (sc. θεοὶ*)* ἐσθλήν· οὐ μὴν γὰρ τοῦ γε κρεῖσσον καὶ ἄρειον ἢ ὅθ' ὁμοφρονέοντε νοήμασιν οἶκον ἔχητον ἀνὴρ ἠδὲ γυνή.

CARM. XIV.—AD REMPUBLICAM.

In Sextum Pompeium civile bellum renovantem.

That this is an allegory is clear; and it is quoted as such by Quintilian, VIII. VI. 44. That it is (in part) an imitation of Alcæus, Fragm. 18, is also clear; but whether it is rightly referred to Pompeius (as in the title,) or to what conjuncture of events it does belong, is and must be doubtful. See however the Essay, translated by Buttmann, in the Philological Museum, Vol. I. p. 483. There it is supposed that Horace is addressing the party who with him had fought under Brutus, had been broken at Philippi, and now again under S. Pompey made head against the new rulers of the State. He would dissuade them from an enterprise which he withdrew from, yet could not blame; which he must regard with fear, yet with sympathy. Pontica (v. 11) is thought to contain a double meaning;—Pompey the Great having gained his chief glories in the conquest of Pontus; his son Sextus heading the same constitutional party, or the remains of it.

1. These naval metaphors are drawn out to great length in Shakespeare's Henry VI. Pt. III. Act V. Sc. 4,—

> 'What though the mast be now blown overboard,
> 'The cable broke, the holding anchor lost,
> 'And half our sailors swallowed in the flood?
> 'Yet lives our pilot still.'.....

2. Fortiter occupa, "make every effort to get into port while you can." In Epist. I. VI. 31,—"take care to get in first." Occupo is simply=φθάνω in Carm. II. XII. 28.

6. Funibus, used for "under-girding the ship," as in the Acts of the Apostles, ch. XXVII. 17.

10. "You will have no fresh deities to invoke, if again overtaken by calamity."

ib. Di, sc. 'tutelares.' Cp. Ov. Epist. XVI. 112,—'Accipit et pictos puppis adunca Deos.' Cp. also Pers. Sat. VI. 30,—

> 'Jacet ipse in litore, et una > 'Ingentes de puppe Dei.'

11. Pontica. Pontus was famous for its ship-timber. Catull. IV. 9.

16. Debes ludibrium. A phrase founded on the Gr. ὀφλεῖν γέλωτα, Eurip. Med. 403. "If you are not destined to become the sport of the winds, beware." Orelli explains 'nisi debes' as equivalent to 'ne debeas,' in which case debere is exactly ὀφλισκάνειν.

17, 18. i. e. I have borne my part in the civil war, and mourn for the friends I have lost, and their losses,—'quorum pars magna fui.'

20. i. e. Dangerous seas, full of straits and shoals.

ib. Cyclades, the islands (ἐν κύκλῳ) round Delos. Virg. Æn. III. 126,—

6. Cp. Ov. Epist. V. 91.

ib. Quam, "one whom,"—a harsh construction.

7. Rumpere. An instance of zeugma. For the construction, comp. Virg. Geor. I. 280,—'conjuratos cœlum rescindere fratres.'

9. Equis. . . . viris, "horse and foot," used as proverbial by Cicero,—'viris equisque ut dicitur . . . decertandum est.' Off. III. 33.

Cf. Hom. Il. β. 388, 390,— > ἱδρώσει μέν τευ τελαμὼν ἀμφὶ στήθεσσι· > ἱδρώσει δέ τευ ἵππος .....

10. Moves. Movere is "to set in motion, to give occasion for, to begin." Ov. Fast. IV. 820,—'inde movetur opus.' Id. I. 19,—'pagina...movetur.'

ib. Quanta moves. Cp. Eur. Hec. 629, sq.,—ἐμοὶ χρῆν συμφοράν, κ. τ. λ.

11. Ægida. Carm. III. III. 57. See Hom. Il. ε. 738; and Eur. Ion, 996.

13. Cp. Hom. Il. γ. 54,— οὐκ ἂν τοι χραίσμῃ κίθαρις τά τε δῶρ' Ἀφροδίτης ἥτε κόμη τό τε εἶδος ὅτ' ἐν κονίῃσι μιγείης.

15. Carmina divides, i.e. accompany your harp with singing. The dative feminis is thought by many to be governed by divides as well as by grata; and the phrase is compared with Carm. I. XXXVI. 6,—'dividit oscula;' i.e. gives now to one, now to another. But it seems preferable to understand the verb in a strictly musical sense; and so our old English authors, by their imitations, evidently understood it. So Spenser, F. Qu. I. v. 17,—

'And all the while most heavenly melody
'About the bed sweet music did divide.'

Again (with more precision of phrase),—

..... 'Sweet music did divide
'Her looser notes with Lydian harmony.'

Milton, Ode on the Passion, st. 1, has,—

'My muse with angels did divide to sing;'

where perhaps the word means simply took part.

The noun division is used in Shakespeare (Rom. and Jul. Act, III. Sc. 1.) as a purely musical term, for "singing many notes on one syllable; a kind of warbling." (See the note in Knight's or in Malone's edition.) Orelli's note is,—'Cantus vocalis et citharæ soni inter se conjuncti totam efficiunt 'symphoniam; jam singulatim spectatis his partibus, ἀοιδὴν dividit citharæ 'cantus, ἀοιδὴ citharæ sonos; i.e. altera utra dimidia totius symphoniæ pars 'est.'

18. Celerem. This epithet suits Ajax Oïleus, not Telamonius. Hom. Il. β. 527.

20. Pulvere collines. Hom. Il. π. 795,—μιάνθησαν δὲ ἔθειραι αἵματι καὶ κονίῃσι. Cp. Virg. Æn. XII. 99,—'fœdare in pulvere crines;' and Pind. Nem. I. 68.

22. Genti. This construction may be allowed as a Græcism; but I remark that, in all Orelli's citations, except the first and two last from Tacitus, also in V. 11, there is a verb to govern.

The best of Orelli's MSS, B, S, T, C, read gentis. Bentley's β, κ, and Hl. A. genti; and excidium, for exitium.

ib. Respicis. Cf. Virg. Æn. VIII. 697,—'Necdum etiam geminos a tergo respicit angues.' This usage of respicio is strikingly poetic: it accords, however, with the ordinary Greek usage of ὀπίσω, to denote future time.

24. Teucer et. I have followed Orelli's reading. There is fair authority for te, if it had not the appearance of being a correction. Bentley's reading, Teucerque et, is still more open to this objection; yet it corresponds closely with Carm. IV. XIV. 45, though he does not allege the passage in support of it.

ib. Sthenelus. Hom. Il. β. 564; ε. 108.

27. Atrox. ἄγριος αἰχμήτης. Hom. Il. ζ. 97.

* I have only lately seen a system of notes and passages, illustrating the Odes of Horace, published at Oxford, 1838, by Rev. J. Howell. He has anticipated me in these and some other quotations, and maintains this interpretation of divides, but I did not borrow from him. (Oct. 1866.)

28. πατέρων μέγ' ἀμείνονες. Hom. Il. δ. 405. Odyss. β. 277,—παῦροι δέ τε πατρὸς ἀρείους; and Juv. XIV. 214.

CARM. XVI.—PALINODIA AD TYNDARIDEM.

The title "Ad Tyndaridem" is doubtful. It is perhaps borrowed from the next Ode, v. 10. If genuine, it implies a Greek original. The poem is called, by the Scholiast and Gesner, an imitation of Stesichorus, of whose palinode see mention at Epod. XVII. 42.

1. Pulchra...pulchrior. Ov. Her. XVI. 85; and Virg. Æn. VII. 657.

3. Iambis, "satiric verse." Ov. Rem. Am. 377,— 'Liber in adversos hostes stringatur iambus;
'Seu celer, extremum seu trahat ille pedem.'

ib. Flamma...mari. Cp. Tibull. I. IX. 49.

5. Dindymene, Cybele, worshipped in Phrygia, especially on M. Dindymus. For Cybele and her rites, see Catull. C. LXIII.

8 Si, for sic, is a mere conjecture. The idiom of sic geminant æra, for sic quatiunt geminando æra, may be compared with S. I. VI. 90.

ib. Æra, "their cymbals." Ov. Fast. IV. 209—213. Lucret. II. 618; 635,— 'Cum pueri circum puerum pernice chorea
'Armatei in numerum pulsarent æribus æra.'

9—13. i.e. "Which no power can quell, whether human or natural." In Soph. Antig. 953, the resistless power of fate is expressed under similar images,— οὐτ' ἄν νιν ὄμβρος οὐτ' Ἄρης οὐ πύργος οὐχ ἁλίκτυποι κελαιναὶ ναῦες ἐκφύγοιεν.

Cp. Eur. Alc. 980.

13. Principi limo, "his first or chief material, clay." Soph. Fragm. 432,—καὶ πρῶτον ἀρχὸν πηλὸν ὀργάζειν χεροῖν.
Cp. τοῦ πηλοπλάστου σπέρματος θνητὴ γυνή, (sc. Pandora.) Æsch. Frag. 362. So πλάσματα πηλοῦ, Arist. Av. 686. So Call. Fragm. 133.

14. Coactus addere, "when forced to add."

15. Et. Adverbially used, as etiam: "to have added in particular the lion's fury."

16. Hence stomachus is used for "anger," esp. in Cicero,—'iracundia et stomachus,' ...'stomachum erumpere.' Verr. II. 20. Att. XVI. 3.

17. Thyestes, whose children his brother Atreus murdered, and dressed their flesh for eating. See 'cena Thyestæ,' Ars P. 91.

18. Ultimæ, "the ultimate, or original cause."
Cp. Eur. Arch. Fr. 36,—πολλοὺς δ' ὁ θυμὸς ὁ μέγας ὤλεσεν βροτῶν.

20. Imprimeret. Cp. 'pressit aratro,' Prop. III. VII. 41.

22. Soph. Antig. 718,—ἀλλ' εἶκε θυμῷ καὶ μετάστασιν δίδου.

ib. Me quoque, etc. Archiloch. Fr. 68,—Ἡμβλακον καί πού τιν' ἄλλον ἢδ' ἄλη κιχήσατο.

24. Celeres. 'Pes citus,' Ars P. 252. Cp. Ovid, quoted on v. 3; but here more probably "hasty, impetuous," as in E. I. XVIII. 90.

CARM. XVII.—AD TYNDARIDEM.

'Amicam in Sabinum suum invitat.' Orell. See v. 10.

1. Lucretilem, a hill in the Sabine territory, near Horace's estate.

2. Muto, "to exchange," or "take in exchange;" commonly the latter in Horace; e.g. Carm. II. XII. 23; III. I. 47.

ib. Lycæo, in Arcadia, whence Faunus is called Lycæus. Ov. Fast. II. 424. A contrary instance in the last Ode, v. 26. As used of "quitting place for place," Cp. Carm. II. XVI. 19; and Gr. ἀμείβω as Eurip. Bacch. 65.

3. Defendit, "keeps off." So Sat. I. III. 14; Virg. Ecl. VII. 47; from 'de-fendo,' obsol. Offendo is another compound, and infensus another, in the participial form.

7. Mariti, "the he-goat." ὦ τράγε, τὰν λευκᾶν αἰγᾶν ἄνερ, Theocr. VIII. 49; 'vir gregis.' Virg. Ecl. VII. 7.

9. Hædiliæ. A hill or wood in the neighbourhood. So Orelli explains and defends the MS. reading, which Bentley altered into hædileæ, a dimin. formed from hædus, "a kid."

[The MS. κ. has a gloss here, curious for its confusion of sense, prosody, and analogy,—'edilia ab edis, ut ovilia ab ove.']

10. Tyndaris. 'Quasi altera Helena.' Orell.

11. Usticæ, a valley (still Val d'Ustica). Cubantis. Cp. Theocr. XIII. 40,—ἠμένῳ ἐν χώρῳ; and Lucret. IV. 517,—'cubantia tecta.'

15. Ad plenum. Virg. Georg. II. 244. "Plenty shall flow forth to you, rich with all the produce of the country."

The cornu copiæ, the fabled horn of the goat which fostered Jupiter, broken off and filled with fruits: then, the emblem of plenty. Ov. Fast. V. 123,—

'Lac dabat illa Deo, sed fregit in arbore cornu: * * *
'Sustulit hoc Nymphe; cinctumque recentibus herbis
'Et plenum pomis ad Jovis ora tulit.'

Byron thus describes Florence (Ch. Harold, IV. 48):

'Girt by her theatre of hills, she reaps
'Her corn and wine and oil, and Plenty leaps
'To laughing life, with her redundant horn.'

18. Fide Teïa, "with the string (i.e. lyre) of Anacreon of Teos;" i.e. in a love song. He flourished B.C. 530: fragments only of his poetry remain. The Odes which pass under his name are spurious.

ib. Ἀνακρέων ὁ Τήιος. Aristoph. Thesm. 161. 'Lynci Teïa musa senis,' Ov. Trist. II. 364. So Sappho, Fragm. 30.

21. See Virg. Geor. II. 90,—'Vindemia...Quam Methymnæo carpit de palmite Lesbos.'

22. Semeleïus...Thyoneus. Thyone was another name for Semele, mother of Bacchus. For a list of the names of Bacchus, see Ovid, Metam. IV. 11. Two occur in the next ode,—Euhius, from the cry εὐοῖ; and Bassareus, from the "wolf-skin" (βασσαρίς) worn by the Thracian Bacchanalians; whence βασσαρέω, Anacr. Frag. 63.

26,27. Allusions to violence of this kind are seen above in C. I. XIII. 9; Propert. II. V. 21; Ov. Am. I. VII. 3; Tibull. I. X. 55—61.

CARM. XVIII.—AD VARUM.

Varus. Perhaps Quinctilius Varus, of Cromona, whose death (in B.C. 24) is lamented in Carm. XXIV. He had a villa at Tibur. See Valckn. vol. I. p. 463. Heyne's Second Excursus ad Bucolica Virg. distinguishes the persons of this name.

1. From Alcæus, Fr. 44,—Μηθὲν ἄλλο φυτεύσῃς πρότερον δένδριον ἀμπέλω.

2. Mite solum, i.e. "a genial soil," one which answers to cultivation. Cp. the use of mitigo, and see note on E. II. II. 186.

ib. See on Carm. I. VII. 13. Catilius, another form for Catillus.

3. Siccis, "the abstemious," Carm. IV. V. 39; the converse of uvidus. Cp. Pers. V. 163,— 'An siccis dedecus obstem Cognatis?'
'Sicci' and 'vinolenti' are contrasted in Cic. contra Rullum, 1; and Acad. II. 27.

ib. Neque ... aliter. Οὐδ' ἔστ' ἄλλο φάρμακον πόνων. Eur. Bacch. 283.

4. Mordaces...soll. "eating cares," Milton, in L'Allegro. Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 261,— 'cura remordet.'

7. Cp. (Dr. Badham's reading of) Eur. Bacch. 860,— Διόνυσον ὃς πέφυκεν ἐν τέλει θεὸς δεινότατος, εὐνοοῦσι δ' ἡπιώτατος.

8. The battle at the marriage feast of Pirithous and Hippodamia. Ov. Met. XII. 210, sqq.

9. Sithoniis, "the Thracians," whose excess was proverbial.

10. Exiguo fine, "by the slight boundary" (or line of separation,) which their passions allow them to observe; i.e. when their passion bursts over all limits of right and wrong.

12. Quatiam. This verb would literally be used of the instruments of the Bacchantes, the thyrsi or tympana, as in Catull. LXIV. 257; Ov. Ibis, 458; or images, as the Scholiast says. Here it is transferred to the god himself.

ib. Obsita frondibus, i.e. "mysteries." Cp. Catull. LXIV. 261.

13. Sub divum, i.e. 'in lucem.'

ib. Berecyntio. The rites of Cybele (celebrated on M. Berecyntus in Phrygia) nearly resembled those of Bacchus: hence they are often mentioned in connection, or contrast. So above, Carm. I. XVI. 7, 8. So Eurip. Bacch. 75—79.

14. The effects (metaph. "the attendants") of excess are selfishness, empty vaunting, betrayal of trust.

CARM. XIX.—DE GLYCERA.

Glycera, a Greek name. Again in Carm. I. XXX. 3. Its diminutive, 'Glycerium,' is in Terence's Andria.

2. Semeles. 'Codicum consensus favet formæ Semelæ.' [O.]

4. Alcman. Fragm. 20.

6. Cp. 'Marmorea cervice,' Virg. G. IV. 523; Ov. F. IV. 135.

8. Lubricus. Properly used of "slippery ground"; hence, "unsafe," i.e. of dangerous power or fascination; or it may be explained as "a face, one look on which makes me glide into love;" (in Art of Latin Poetry, Cambr.) Chatterton translated this line by "the softness of each frequent smile," as though 'lubricus' could mean the changeful, lively play of features. [M.] inclines to this interpretation, quoting 'oculos lubricos et mobiles' from Cic. N. D. II. 51. Martial has borrowed the word, 'dum vultus lubricus,' IX. LVII. 11; probably in the sense of "smooth."

9. Tota ruens, i.e. with all her power. Eur. Hipp. 443, ἦν πολλὴ ῥυῇ. Similar construction, Sat. I. VII. 28; and 'magnumque fluentem Nilum.' Virg. G. III. 28.

10. Cyprum. Alcman. Fr. 10,—Κύπρον ἱμερτὰν λιποῖσα καὶ Πάφον περιρρυτάν.

11. Virg. G. III. 31. (Comp. the description of Camilla, Æn. XI. 654); Ov. Fast. V. 591; A. Am. I. 210.

13. Cæspitem. Cp. 'Festus promissa Deis animalia cæspes Expectat.' Juv. XII. 2.

14. Verbenas, herbs torn up with their roots and earth from some sacred place. See the word sagmina in the Dict. of Antiquities. Cp. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 65,—'Verbenasque adole pingues et mascula thura.'

ib. Thuraque. I cite tura here and elsewhere among the v r.: it is the form preferred by Wagner, and see Cicero's rule in Orator, XLVIII. 160. But Forbiger allows (Virg. l.c.) 'forma aspirata,' i.e. 'Græca, Servio teste, est antiquior;' and Fea attests it here,—'tum ex optimis MSS., tum ex marmoribus scriptis passim.'

16. Hostia. The Scholiast observes on this, that the sacrifices offered to Venus were unbloody: and so Catullus says,—'Placabis festis luminibus Venerem sanguinis expertem,' LXVI. 90. Tacitus (Hist. II. 3.) speaks of victims, but also of the altar being unstained,—'Paphiæ Veneri hostiæ, ut quisque vovit, sed mares deliguntur....Sanguinem aræ offundere vetitum; precibus et igne puro altaria adolentur.' But see Ovid. Fast. I. 452,—'Uritur Idaliis alba columba focis.' With which compare Propert. V. V. 65.

CARM. XX.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Vile...Sabinum. 'Vinum Tiberi devectum,' Juv. VII. 121 (where see Mayor's note.)

2. Cantharis. Virg. Ecl. VI. 17,—'Et gravis attrita pendebat cantharus ansa.'

ib. Græca, "which had held Greek wine before."

3. Levi, "smeared," i.e. sealed. Carm. III. VIII. 10. Its compound relino is "to unseal;" 'relevi dolia omnia.' Ter. Heaut. III. I. 51.

4. After a dangerous illness, on his first appearance in the theatre, Mæcenas was received with a round of applause, a mark of popularity again alluded to Carm. II. XVII. 25.

5. Patrni, "ancestral," alluding to Mæcenas' Etruscan origin. Tuscus is the epithet of the Tiber in C. III. VII. 28; and Virg. G. I. 499.

CARM. XXI.—IN DIANAM ET APOLLINEM.

A festal hymn (as entitled), or rather an address to the chorus employed to sing at the rites. This is an example of the class of poems referred to Epist. II. I. 132.

2. Intonsum, i.e. "the beardless, youthful deity." Tibull. I. IV. 38. Gr. ἀκερσεκόμης.

3. Λητὼ...Δίος κυδρὴν παράκοιτιν. Hom. Od. λ. 579; ἡ Δίος δάμαρ Λητώ, Eur. Iph. I. 385. Add Call. in Delum, 57.

6. Algidus, a mountain of Latium, mentioned, as sacred to Diana, Car. Sæc. 69.

7. Erymanthus, in Arcadia. Cp. Hom. Od. ζ. 103.

8. Cragus, in Lycia.

9. Vos...mares. The youths celebrate Apollo, as the virgins Diana. Compare Soph. Trach. 207—214.

10. Δῆλον Ἀπόλλωνος κουροτρόφον. Call. in Delum, 276.

12. Carm. I. x. 6. The lyre is said to have been the invention of Mercury, and his gift to Apollo.

13. These deities are invoked together against the pestilence, as ἀλεξίμοροι, Soph. Œd. Tyr. 164.

ib. Lacrimosum, δακρυόεντα, Hom. Il. ε. 737; πολύδακρυν, Il. θ. 515; 'lacrimabile,' Virg. Æn. VII. 604.

14. Et principe is the correct reading: in the Text et has been accidentally omitted. 'Scaliger delendum censuit et ..... sed Codicum lectio teneriorem præbet sensum, quia Cæsar ita cum pop. Romano artissime conjungitur.' [O.]

CARM. XXII.—AD ARISTIUM FUSCUM.

Aristius Fuscus, a poet and friend of Horace, mentioned again in Sat. I. IX. 61; I. X. 83; and Epist. I. 10.

3. Venenatis. A mention of poisoned arrows is made in Hom. Od. α 262; but only (as is observed in Hayman's note) in a fictitious narrative, and as a thing odious to the gods. Virgil speaks of such in three places; Æn. IX. 773; X. 140; and XI. 857. So Ovid. Pont. IV. VII. 11,—'Aspicis (sc. in Scythia) et mitti sub adunco toxica ferro.' Toxicum indeed is most probably derived from τόξα.

5. Æstuosas. Carm. II. VII. 16. Orelli prefers the sense of "burning," quoting Carm. I. XXXI. 5; Cic. ad Att. V. XIV. 1; Catull. VII. 4.

6, 7. Caucasum, the great range between the Black and the Caspian Seas, rising to the height of 9600 feet. Virg. Æn. IV. 366,—'Cautibus horrens Caucasus.'

ib. Inhospitalem. Gr. ἄξενον, ἀπάνθρωπον. Cp. Æsch. P.V. 20; Theocr. Id. XIII. 75.

8. Hydaspes, now "the Jhylum," the westernmost of the five rivers of the Punjab.

11. Curis...expeditis, for the more usual or prose construction, expeditus. Orell. Cf. Catul. XXXI. 7,—'O quid solutis est beatius curis.'

14. Daunias, a Greek adjective form: 'Daunias tellus,' for Daunia, a part of Apulia.

ib. Æsculetis, æsculus, Gr. φηγός,—'Nemorum quæ maxima frondet.' Virg. Georg. II. 16, 291. The tallest species of oak, the Italian oak, with edible acorns.

15. Jubæ tellus, i.e. "Africa."

17. "Place me in the most uninhabitable (domibus negata) corners of the earth, in "the frigid or the torrid zone: still shall I love Lalage." The sentiment is thus paraphrased by Cowper in Table Talk,—

'Place me where winter breathes his keenest air,
'And I will sing, if Liberty be there;
'And I will sing at Liberty's dear feet
'In Afric's torrid clime, or India's fiercest heat.'

Compare to the sentiment of Virg. Ecl. x. 64,—

'Non illum (sc. Amorem) nostri possunt mutare labores:
'Nec si frigoribus mediis Hebrumque bibamus
'Sithoniasque nives hiemis subeamus aquosæ;
'Nec si cum moriens alta liber aret in ulmo,
'Æthiopum versemus oves sub sidere Cancri.
'Omnia vincit amor.'

The full description of the Zones is in Virg. Geo. I. 233; and Ovid. Met. I. 45. The uninhabitable character of the torrid and frigid zones is expressed in prose, Xen. Anab. I. VII. 6.

23. Dulce ridentem...loquentem. Imitation of Sappho, Fragm. II. 3,— καὶ πλατίαν ἀδὺ φωνοίσας ἐπακούει, καὶ γελάσας ἱμερόεν.

CARM. XXIII.—AD CHLOËN.

In part an imitation of Anacreon, Fr. 49.

1. Inuleo. The omission of the n, in this diminutive from hinnus, (Gr. ἵννος,) seems analogous to the change in forming annulus from annus. The form is authorised by all the best MSS.; Orelli's B. S. T. and Hl. A. A. adds the gloss,—inuleus, anniculus cervus.

4. Virg. Æn. II. 728,—'Nunc omnes terrent auræ, sonus excitat omnis.' Gray's Ode on Eton College,—

'They hear a voice in every wind,
'And snatch a fearful joy!'

ib. Silüæ. So Catul. LXVI. 38,—'dissolüo;' Ov. Her. XII. 4,—'evolüisse.'

5. Veris inhorruit adventus, "the early spring rustles in the leaves." Orell. Cp. the description of the winds, as 'veris comites,' Carm. IV. XII. 1; but the mention of the time has perhaps more to do with the first growth of the leaf. Bentley's alteration (vepris.....ad ventum) is worth noticing, for its elegance. Keller and Holden have adopted it, against all MSS.

ib. Inhorruit. Ὑψίκομον παρὰ τάνδε καθίζεο φωνήεσσαν φρίσσουσαν πυκινοῖς κῶνον ὑπὸ ζεφύροις. Plato, Epigr.

7. Cp. Virg. Ecl. II. 9,—

'Nunc virides etiam occultant spineta lacertos.'

9. Ov. Met. I. 504,—

'Nympha precor Penei mane; non insequor hostis:
'Nympha mane: sic agna lupum, sic cerva leonem,' etc.

10. Frangere persequor. Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 31,—'Lentum convellere vimen Insequor.' Frangere. Hom. Il. λ. 113,—συνέαξε λαβών.

12. Tempestiva...viro, "marriageable." Virg. Æn. VII. 53,—'matura viro.' So in Soph. Trach. 207,—ὁ μελλόνυμφος, (i.e. "all ye who are marriageable.")

CARM. XXIV.—AD VIRGILIUM.

Publius Virgilius Maro, five years older than Horace. Mentioned in Sat. I. V, as having introduced him to Mæcenas. And see above, Carm. I. III. 8.

2. Capitis. A phrase less common in Latin than in Greek,— Τευκρὲ, φίλη κεφαλή. Hom.

Ἰσμήνης κάρα. Soph.

2. Præcipe, "lead off:" ἔξαρχε, as in Hom. Il. σ. 51.

5. Perpetuus...urget. Virg. Æn. x. 745–6,—

'Olli dura quies oculos et ferreus urget.
'Somnus: in æternam clauduntur lumina noctem.'

Cp. ἀτέρμονα νήγρετον ὕπνον, Mosch. in Bion. 112. Gray ('Each in his narrow cell for ever laid') has been blamed for adopting the classical phrase, without qualification.

6. Justitiæ soror. Cp. Cic. Partit. 41,—'Justitia.....creditis in rebus fides..... nominatur.' Off. I. 7,—'Fundamentum autem est justitiæ fides.' With the whole passage, compare Ov. Am. I. III. 13,—

'Et nulli cessura fides, sine crimine mores,
'Nudaque simplicitas, purpureusque pudor.'

7. Nuda Veritas; i.e. "unadorned truth."

'Siccis rustica veritas capillis.' Mart. X. LXXII. 11.

11. Frustra pius. Ov. Am. III. IX. 37,—'Vive pius, moriere pius.'

ib. Non ita creditum. 'Entrusted to them not so (i. e. not with any expectation of such bereavement,) but with the confident hope that they would protect him. Cp. inf. I. XXXVI. 3. Others take it, "lent to you by them not so (i.e. not as if their claim to dispose of him was surrendered,) but as a loan to be resumed." With the latter interpretation we might compare the metaphor in Cic. Tusc. Q. I. 39,—'Usuram vitæ nulla præstituta die. Quid est quod querare si repetit cum vult?' The first interpretation has some analogy to Virg. Æn. II. 51,—'Nil jam cœlestibus ullis Debentem;' i. e. owing them nothing, as no longer dependent on their care; having, as we say, "paid the debt of Nature."

13. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 119,—'Si potuit manes arcessere conjugis Orpheus, 'Threicia fretus cithara fidibusque canoris.'

And Eur. Iph. Aul. 1211,—ἐι μὲν τὸν Ὀρφέως εἶχον, ὦ πάτερ, λόγον, κ. τ. λ.

15. Vanæ...imagini, "the lifeless shade." Cp. Æsch. Agam. 1019,— τὸ δ' ἐπὶ γᾶν πεσὸν ἅπαξ θανάσιμον προπάροιθ' ἀνδρὸς μέλαν αἷμα τίς ἂν πάλιν ἀγκαλέσαιτ' ἐπαείδων;

So Eumen. 647; Eur. Suppl. 776. The sentiment, clothed in another metaphor, is in Shakesp. Othello, Act v. Sc. 2,—"Once put out thine," &c.

16—18. Pind. Ol. IX. 33,— βρότεα σώματ' ἐξ κατάγει κοίλαν πρὸς ἀγυιὰν θνασκόντων.

18. Compulerit. This verb is specially used in reference to flocks, as in Virg. Ecl. II. 30, and VII. 2. So in prose,—'pecora atque homines ... compellebat,' Cæs. B. G. V. 19; the dative (gregi) follows it, as it might follow 'conjunxerit.' "Whom Mercury has once driven among, or to join, his flock."

19. Levius fit patientia. Cp. (out of many passages) Æsch. P. V. 104; Eurip. Fragm. Antig. 15; Soph. Thyest. Fr. 236; Pind. Pyth. II. 93,—φέρειν ἐλαφρῶς... ζυγὸν ἀρήγει; Archil. Fr. VIII. 6,—Θεοὶ γὰρ ἀνηκέστοισι κακοῖσιν, ὦ φίλ', ἐπὶ κρατερὴν τλημοσύνην ἔθεσαν φαρμακόν.

CARM. XXV.—AD LYDIAM.

An invective against Lydia, whom, in her decay of youth and beauty, her lovers are leaving.

1. See Becker's Gallus, Exc. I. Sc. 2. Cp. Theocr. II. 127.

4. Limen amat, "opens not." Orell. Cp. Virg. Æn. v. 163,—litus ama, "hug the shore."

7. Me tuo. Cp. Ov. Ep. v. 4,—'Læsa queror de te, si sinis ipse, meo.'

11. "When the wind is raging more fiercely, during the changes (hidings) of the moon." An image of dark and dreary desolation: as is also the metaphor 'hiemis sodali,' ver. 19, which adds, however, the idea of a sweeping destruction.

14. Cp. Virg. Georg. III. 280,—'hippomanes.'

16. Non sine questu...quod, i.e. "you complain that they prefer the young ivy and dark green myrtle to the sear leaf, which they let float down the stream." Virentis aridas are similarly opposed in Carm. IV. XIII.

20. Dedicet Hebro. This part of the idea is the germ of Moore's 2nd National Air ("Flow on thou shining river,") and receives its clearest illustration from it,—

'And tell her this, when youth is o'er,
'Her lone and loveless charms shall be 'Thrown by, upon life's weedy shore,
'Like those sweet flowers from thee.'

ib. Hebro, the Thracian river, now Maritza; proverbial (especially in Horace, with his Greek models) for coldness and rapidity; e. g. Virg. Æn. I. 317; Ecl. X. 65.

CARM. XXVI.—DE ÆLIO LAMIA.

Lucius Ælius Lamia. See Carm. III. XVII, addressed to him.

1. Musis amicus. Virg. Æn. IX. 774. Used passively, as in the Gr. Μούσαις φίλος. Cp. Carm. III. IV. 25. Cp. the Homeric τὸν περὶ Μοῦσ' ἐφίλησε, Od. θ. 63. But in Carm. III. IV. 25, the adjective seems to be taken actively=φιλόμουσος. Theocr. XIV. 61.

2. Tradam ... portare. Compare (for the construction) Virg. Æn. I. 319,—'dedoratque comam diffundere ventis;' (for meaning) Eur. Troad. 419,—ἀνέμοις φέρεσθαι παραδίδωμι. Anacreon, Od. XXXIX. 13,— τὸ δ' ἄχος πέφευγε μιχθέν ἀνεμοτρόφῳ θυέλλῃ.

Apoll. R. I. 1334,—ἀλλ' ἀνέμοισι δώομεν ἀμπλακίην.

Ov. Her. II. 25,—'Ventis et verba et vela dedisti.'

4. i. e. The Scythian aid proffered to Phraates. See the note on Carm. II. II. 17.

5. Unice securus. Theogn. 764.

6—8. Integris...flores...coronam. Comp. (though differently applied) the lines of Lucret. I. 927,—

'Juvat integros accedere fontes
'Atque haurire; juvatque novos decerpere flores,
'Insignemque meo capiti petere inde coronam,
'Unde prius nulli velarint tempora Musæ.'

7. Necte. Pind. Ol. VI. 86,—πλέκων ὕμνον. Nem. VII. 77,—εἴρειν στεφάνους.

9. Mei...honores, "my efforts to honour him."

11. Sacrare. We may translate "immortalize." But the figure is founded really on the idea of poetry being the work of the Muses, and divine. So [M.] compares Pindar, Isthm. VII. 60,—ὕμνοις θεᾶν διδόμεν. Cicero has 'litteris consecrata' in Tusc. Qu. V. 4 (11.) Compare 'consecrat' in Carm. IV. VIII. 27, where the verb, however, may mean "represent under a sacred character."

CARM. XXVII.—AD SODALES.

1. From Anacreon, Fr. 63. Cp. Ov. Met. XII. 242,—

> .....'Prima pocula pugna
> 'Missa volant, ...
> 'Res epulis quondam nunc bello et cædibus aptæ.'

5. Acinaces. This was the short sword, or scimitar, worn by the Persians on the right thigh. See an account of it in Kenrick's note on Herodt. III. 64.

6. Immane quantum. Gr. οὐράνιον ὅσον, (as Aristoph. Ran. 781.) Compare the similar usages,—τυτθὸν ὅσσον ἄπωθεν, "ever so little way off," Theocr. I. 45. ἀμήχανον ὅσον, μυρία ὅσα, and in fem. gen. θαυμαστὴν ὅσην, as in Plat. Alc. 2nd. p. 125. English,—"It is totally (literally, monstrously) at variance with." The phrase occurs in Tacit. Hist. IV. 34; and in Sallust, Fragm. Hist. Lib. II. Nimium quantum is also used, Cic. Or. 26.

11. Frater Megillæ, a fictitious name.

12. i. e. With whom he is in love. Ov. Her. XVI. 275,—

> 'Non mea sunt summa leviter destricta sagitta
> 'Pectora: descendit vulnus ad ossa meum.'

ib. Volnere. Virg. Æn. IV. 2,—'Vulnus alit venis.'

15. Οὐ γὰρ ἐπ' αἰκελίῳ παιδὶ δαμεὶς ἐφάνης, Theogn. 1344.

19. Anaxilas apud Athen. XIII. p. 558,— > τίς γὰρ ἢ δράκαιν' ἄμικτος ἢ Χίμαιρα πυρπνόος

> ἢ Χάρυβδις ἢ τρίκρανος Σκύλλα ποντία κύων
> Σφίγξ, Ὕδρα, λέαιν', Ἔχιδνα, πτηνά δ' Ἁρπυιῶν γένη > εἰς ὑπερβολὴν ἀφῖκται τοῦ καταπύστου γένους.

ib. Laborabas. The imperfect is used of present time, to express surprise at something unexpected; an idiom common in Greek, but generally with the addition of the particle ἄρα. So Hom. Il. σ. 358; γ. 147; Eurip. Med. 1279; Arist. Equit. 138, 382: add from Homer, Il. η. 31,—φίλον ἔπλετο; θ. 163,—γυναικὸς ἄρ' ἄντι τέτυξο ("you are, I see, no better than a woman;") φ. 281,—εἵμαρτο, "now I find I am destined," &c. In all these instances we translate the imperfect by the present. Our common phrase, "You are! I did not know you were," seems to point out the origin of the construction.

19. i. e. "Such a passion is an abyss, from which no skill nor strength can rescue you."

21. Thessalis. Thessalian sorceries were famous. Cp. Epod. V. 45; Epist. II. II. 208.

24. Chimæra. Hom. Il. ζ. 181,—πρόσθε λέων ὄπιθεν δὲ δράκων μέσση δὲ χίμαιρα. χίμαιρα, properly "a goat;" the fabled monster of Lycia, destroyed by Bellerophon mounted on his winged horse Pegasus. Cp. Eur. Ion, 202,— > τόνδ' ἄθρησον

> πτεροῦντος ἔφεδρον ἵππου· > τὰν πυρπνέουσαν ἐναίρει > τρισώματον ἀλκάν.

CARM. XXVIII.

2. Archytas, a Greek mathematician and astronomer, of Tarentum, fl. B. C. 400. See Cic. de Senect. 12,—'Magni in primis et præclari viri.'

This Ode has been thought to be a dialogue between the shade of Archytas and a sailor, who, finding the philosopher's corpse on the shore, after shipwreck, commiserates him (down to ver. 16, or ver. 20,) and is then implored to bury him. But this supposition involves a forced sense for 'cohibent,' if used of a body exposed on the strand; and accords ill with 'me quoque' in ver. 21: it leaves too a contradiction between v. 3, which affirms burial, and vv. 23, sq. which entreat for it.

The explanation which clears up most difficulties, and which seems to find most favour now, is the one given in Orelli's excursus, as suggested to him from two independent sources. It is as follows:—The tomb of Archytas is supposed (an inference from vv. 1–6) to be a conspicuous object on the Apulian shore. A passing mariner (nauta, v. 23*)* surveying it, gives vent to reflections upon death, and the contrast between the body 'laid in its narrow cell,' and the mind once soaring in knowledge and in thought to the loftiest height. These reflections are contained in the first twenty verses. They are interrupted or succeeded by an address from another speaker, whose corpse after shipwreck has been thrown up upon the coast, and who implores burial.

2. Cohibent. Compare generally Shakesp. Hen. IV. Act v. Sc. 4:

'When that this body did contain a spirit,
'A kingdom for it was too small a bound.
'But now, two paces of the vilest earth 'Is room enough,'

With 'cohibent,' as a proper term to express the effect of death, compare C. II. XX. 8; and III. IV. 80; and 'coercet,' C. II. XVIII. 38; and the Homeric γαῖα κατέσχε, Od. λ. 548; and γῆ φυσίζοος ἥτε κατὰ κρατερόν περ ἐρύκει, Il. φ. 63.

5. Ov. Fast. I. 298; Cic. de Fin. II. 34,—'Sapientem...omne cælum totamque cum universo mari terram mente complexum.' Cp. Ib. XXXI. 102; also Lucret I. 73,—

...'Vivida vis animi pervicit et extra
'Processit longe flammantia mœnia mundi,
'Atque omne immensum peragravit mente animoque.'

6. Morituro. Cp. Carm. II. III. 4. "Avails not to prevent your death." Cp. for the sentiment, and the following instances, Hom. Il. σ. 117,— οὐδὲ γὰρ οὐδὲ βίῃ Ἡρακλῆος φύγε Κῆρα, ἀλλὰ ἓ Μοῖρ' ἐδάμασσε.....

Il. ο. 138,—...μεθέμεν χόλον υἷος ἑῆος,
ἤδη γάρ τις τοῦγε βίην καὶ χεῖρας ἀμείνων ἢ πέφατ' ἢ καὶ ἔπειτα πεφήσεται.

So Lucret. III. 1025—45; and Virg. Æn. X. 470.

7. i.e. Tantalus. For his fate, and its cause, see Eur. Orest. 5—10; Hom. Od. λ. 581.

8. Tithonus, married to Aurora, and borne by her to heaven. Cp. Eur. Troad. 855; Homer, Hym. in Ven. 161; Mimnermus (Frag. IV.); Propert. II. XVIII. 7.

9. Minos. Hom. Od. τ. 179. For his office after death, see Virg. Æn. VI. 432.

10. See Ov. Met. XV. 160—164. These lines refer to the doctrine of metempsychosis, and the assertion of Pythagoras, that he remembered the Trojan War, and had then been Euphorbus.

14. Cp. Hdt. IV. 95,—Ἑλλήνων οὐ τῷ ἀσθενεστάτῳ σοφιστῇ Πυθαγόρῃ.

17. Cp. Simonides, Amorg. Fr. I. 12,— τοὺς δὲ δύστηνοι νόσοι φθείρουσι θνητῶν, τοὺς δ' Ἄρει δεδμημένους πέμπει μελαίνης Ἀΐδης ὑπὸ χθονός· οἱ δ' ἐν θαλάσσῃ.

20. Nullum...caput is perhaps merely=neminem. Or it may contain allusion to the offering due to Proserpine, mentioned in Virg. Æn. IV. 798.

ib. Fugit, used like a Gr. aorist, as in C. XXXIV. 16.

21. Devexus, "sloping downwards;" here, "setting." Cp. Virg. Æn. VII. 719.

ib. Orionis. Theocr. VII. 54.

25. Quodc. minabitur. See A.P. 350. There, however, Orelli explains the construction as elliptical, with ferire understood. Here quodcumque must be taken with the intransitive minabitur, according to the ordinary use of neuter pronouns.

28. Tibi defluat. ἐς τὲ καταῤῥεῖ, Theocr. I. 5.

ib. Unde potest. (M.) compares Hesiod, Theog. 420,—ὄλβον ὀπάζει ἐπεὶ δύναμίς γε πάρεστι.

29. Ab Jove. Jupiter is invoked, as the giver of wealth, by Callim. Hym. ad Jov. XCI. 94,—δῶτορ ἐάων.

ib. Tarenti. Neptune was the tutelar god of Tarentum, being reputed the father of its mythical founder, Taras.

30. Immeritis nocituram. Cp. Solon, XII. 31,—

.....αὖτις ἀναίτιοι (where Bergk reads καὶ ὕντιτα) ἔργα τίνουσιν ἢ παῖδες τούτων ἢ γένος ἐξοπίσω.

Cp. also Hom. Od. λ. 72, where Elpenor is entreating for burial,— μή μ' ἄκλαυστον ἄθαπτον ἰὼν ὄπιθεν καταλείπειν νοσφισθεὶς μή τοί τι θεῶν μήνιμα γένωμαι.

Eur. Phœn. 934; Hippol. 831; and Æsch. Suppl. 433. Add Juv. XIII. 206.

32. Vices superbæ, "an overwhelming retribution." Superbus seems to answer to, and come from, the Gr. ὑπέρφευ, ὑπερφυής, (b=φ as in orbus, from ὀρφός, ὀρφανός). The radical notion of the Greek words is excess; and this may be the first meaning of the Latin, though superseded by the secondary and subjective notion of pride.

36. The penalty of lying unburied is expressed in Virg. Æn. VI. 325.; the slightness of the rite necessary (injecto ter pulvere), in Soph. Antig. 256, and 429, sq.

CARM. XXIX.—AD ICCIUM.

Iccius. Epist. I. XII, is addressed to him.

1. The expedition intended here, and which Iccius is represented as being about to share, was that of Ælius Gallus, afterwards prefect of Egypt, B. C. 25, 24. See Merivale's Hist. Rome, ch. 34.

4. Medo. Used, with great latitude, of the Oriental nations generally. Cp. 'Medus Hydaspes' in Virg. Georg. IV. 211.

7. Puer...ex aula. Cp. Liv. XLV. 6,—'Pueri regii...principum liberi ad ministerium regis electi.' Juv. IX. 46,—'Puerum...dignum cyatho.' Add Juv. V. 56,—'Flos Asiæ ante ipsum,' etc.

8. Ad cyathum, i.e. as cup-bearer. So Juv. XIII. 44,—'ad cyathos.' So 'servus ad manum'=an amanuensis, in Cic. Or. III. 60. By later writers the prep. a is used to denote office, as a manu, ab epistolis (a secretary), a rationibus (an accountant).

11. i.e. "What can now be thought impossible?" So Ov. Her. V. 29, sq.; Trist. I. VIII. 1. So Eur. Med. 410. (but rather of what which is an unnatural reversal of truth and equity),—ἄνω ποταμῶν ἱερῶν χωροῦσι παγαί. Cic. ad Att. XV. IV. 1. Cp. 'Your mountains shall bend, and your streams ascend,' in Sir W. Scott's Lay, I. 18.

14. Panætii. See Cic. Ac. Qu. II. 2 (5), and II. 33 (98). He was a Stoic of Rhodes, and Cicero's model in his work de Officiis.

14. Socraticam. Cic. de Orat. III. 16, (59-61,)—'Omnes se philosophi Socraticos se et dici vellent, et esse arbitrarentur;' and Proœm. Ac. Qu. I. 1,—'Philosophiam veterem illam a Socrate ortam.'

15. Hiberis. Spain was famous in early, as in later ages, for the manufacture and tempering of steel. Martial describes his native place Bilbilis as 'auro Bilbilis et superba ferro,' XII. XVII. 11; and again, IV. LV. 11.

CARM. XXX.—AD VENEREM.

1. Cnidus, in Caria. Paphus,—Hom. Odyss. θ. 362; Virg. Æn. I. 415. Compare Alcman. Fr. 10,—Κύπρον ἱμερτὰν λιποῦσα καὶ Πάφον περιῤῥύταν. The statue of the Cnidian Venus, the great work of Praxiteles, was very famous. See the Life of the Artist in Biograph. Dict.

5. Solutis...zonis, i.e. discincte ludentes, "unrestrained, sportive, and free." Commentators quote Seneca de Benef. I. 3.

7. Juventas. Ἥβη, who is reckoned as an attendant on Venus, in Hom. Il. ad Apoll. 195.

8. Mercurius. 'Quod Amor disertos faciat; seu quia per disertam orationem solet amor conciliari.' Unde Ov. A. A. II. 123,—

'Non formosus erat, sed erat facundus Ulysses,
'Et tamen æquoreas torsit amore deas.' [D.]

So in the cestus of Venus, Hom. Il. ξ. 216, among the θελκτήρια πάντα this is mentioned,—ἐν δ' ὀαριστὺς πάρφασις ἥτ' ἔκλεψε νόον.

CARM. XXXI.—AD APOLLINEM.

An Ode exemplifying contentment.

'Vatis avarus
'Non temere est animus.' Epist. II. I. 119.

It was composed upon the dedication or opening of the new public library on the Palatine in B.C. 28. See note on E. I. III. 17.

1. Dedicatum. As the name of a deity is often used for the statue or temple consecrated to him, so it has the participle or verb dedico applied to itself. Orelli. Cp. Cic. de N. D. II. 23; Ov. Fast. VI. 637,—'Te quoque magnifica, Concordia, dedicat ædo.' So in Livy, V. 52,—'Juno Reg...dedicata est.' This sense of consecrating is not the first sense of dedico. See Lucr. I. 367.

3. Non, etc. Ov. Am. I. XV. 35,—

'Vilia miretur vulgus, mihi flavus Apollo,
'Pocula Castaliæ plena ministret aquæ.'

4. Sardiniæ. Sicily and Sardinia are called 'benignissimas urbis Romæ nutrices,' by Valer. Max. VII. VI. 1.

6. Indicum. Virg. Georg. I. 57; Ovid. Medic. Fac. 10. In an earlier age, this epithet was used of gold. See Soph. Antig. 1038.

8. Mordet...taciturnus. τοῖχον ὑποτρώγων ἡσύχιος ποταμός. Call. Ep. XLV. 4.

9. Premant.....falce, "prune;" as in Virg. Georg. I. 157. Calena poetically joined with falce, instead of vitem: as Carm. I. IX. 7, Sabina is joined with diota, not with merum. So, Carm. III. VI. 38, Sabellis ligonibus shows that the mascula proles there eulogised are the veteres Sabelli of Virgil.

15. Cp. Alcman. Fragm. 17; Eur. Fr. Inc. 111 [O.]; and, as more immediately to the purpose, the 'poetæ convivium,' in Martial, X. XLVIII.

16. Malvæ. Cp. Hesiod. ἐργ. καὶ ἡμ. 40 (in praise of contentment,)— οὐδὲ ἴσασιν ὅσῳ πλέον ἥμισυ παντός, οὐδ' ὅσον ἐν μαλάχῃ τε καὶ ἀσφοδέλῳ μέγ' ὄνειαρ.

"Mallows" are mentioned as a last resource in S. S. Job, XXX. 4.

18. Latoë, from the Gr. form Λητῷος. So in Ov. Met. VII. 384,—'Letoïdos;' VIII. 15,—'proles Letoïa.'

ib. Et, precor, integra cum mente. Juv. Sat. X. 356,—'Orandum est ut sit mens sana in corpore sano.'

20. Cp. μὴ ζῷην μετ' ἀμουσίας, Eur. H. Fur. 676; and Μήποτέ μοι μελέδημα νεώτερον ἄλλο φανείη.

Ἀντ' ἀρετῆς σοφίης τ', ἀλλὰ τόδ' αἰὲν ἔχω.
Τερπομένην φόρμιγγι καὶ ὀρχηθμῷ καὶ ἀοιδῇ,
Καὶ μετὰ τῶν ἀγαθῶν ἐσθλὸν ἔχοιμι νόον. Theogn. 789.

CARM. XXXII.—AD LYRAM.

1. Poscimur, "I am called on for an Ode,"(i.e. 'a Mæcenate et Aug.' Gl. in Hl. A.) So, 'Poscimur, Aonides,' Ov. Met. V. 333; and

.....'Palilia poscor;
'Non poscor frustra, si favet alma Pales.' Fast. IV. 721.

2. Lusimus. Used of light poetry. Virg. Ecl. I. 10,—'Ludere quæ vellem calamo permisit agresti.' Georg. IV. 565; and Ov. Trist. IV. X. 1,—'tenerorum lusor amorum.' [M.] compares Pind. Ol. I. 16,—οἷα παίζομεν.

7. Religarat. Cp. Eur. Hipp. 761,—Μουνύχου δ' ἀκταῖσιν ἐκδήσαντο πλεκτὰς πεισμάτων ἀρχάς.

13. Cp. Pind. Nem. V. 24; and φόρμιγξ δαιτός ἑταίρη, Hom. Hmy. Merc. 31. Compare Tibul. IV. II. 22,—'Et testudinea, Phœbe superbe, lyra;' and Hom. Il. α. 602.

15. Cumque...vocanti, "whensoever I call." Cumque is explained as='quoque tempore,' in Varronianus, p. 388. Lachmann (Lucr. V. 311) denies that cumque can be used except in combination with a relative; and he reads here medicumque.

CARM. XXXIII.—AD ALBIUM TIBULLUM.

Albius Tibullus. See Epist. I. IV, addressed to him; and Ovid's beautiful elegy upon his death, Am. III. IX; and the epitaph of Domitius Marsus,— 'Te quoque Virgilio comitem non æqua, Tibulle,

'Mors juvenem campos misit ad Elysios.
'Ne foret aut elegis molles qui fleret amores,
'Aut caneret forti regia bella pede.'

He died B. C. 18, in less than a year after Virgil.

1. Ne doleas, a dependent construction,—"that you may not grieve, observe the instances of Lycoris Cyrus, etc." So Lambinus. For the principle involved, see Madvig, Lat. Gr. § 386; and, for a fuller treatment of the subject, his Opuscula, Vol. II. p. 105. He points out that, in Augustan writers, correct idiom required the second future (or futurum exactum) after ne, when used imperatively. This rule is exemplified in Cic. Div. II. 127, (61)—'Hoc facito, hoc ne feceris;' where ne fac, or ne facito, would be a poetic construction; ne facias, a faulty one, admitted only by post-Augustan authors; as in Persius, III. 96; Juvenal, XV. 89. An exception, however, is made in the case of hypothetical sentences, as e.g. 'quum absit, ne requiras,' Cic. Senect. XXXIII.

It must be asked whether ne...recuses, in Hor. Sat. II. v. 16, is to be classed under this head of exception. The rule is perhaps general rather than absolute: it is evident that, in the ordinary usage of the best writers, ne, with the second sing.pres.subj. (='ne dolcas, ne facias,' etc.) would not be construed as simply prohibitive, but as dependent or quasi-dependent; that is, in connection with a rule, as in Hor. Sat. II. III. 32,—'ne te frustrere;' or with a reason, as in Sat. II. III. 88,—'ne sis patruus mihi;' or with an alternative, as in Carm. II. I. 38,—'ne.....retractes.' It is observable that this restriction and usage does not apply to the third person, e.g. 'ne careat,' Carm. I. XXXVI. 10; 'ne pudeat,' Virg. Georg. I. 80; 'ne transieris Iberum, ne quid rei tibi sit cum Saguntinis,' Livy, XXI. 44; nor to the particles nec, neu, nihil; see Carm. II. XI. 4,—'nec trepides;' Ov. Ep. I. 2,—'nil rescribas.'

3. Cur, "because." So in Epist. I. VIII. 10, accounted for by Orelli as a mixture of two constructions: '1. Ne dolens dicas, Cur mihi præfertur? 2. Noli dolere quod præferatur.'

5. Lycoris; Cyrus; Pholoe. Fictitious examples of the love described by Callim. Epigr. 32,—τὰ μὲν φεύγοντα διώκειν οἶδε... Cp. Mosch. Idyll. VI. 1.

8. Cp. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 27,—'Jungentur jam gryphes equis.'

15. Acrior Hadriæ. αὐθαδεστέρα θαλάσσης. Eur. Hipp. 304.

CARM. XXXIV.

2. Insanientis. The Epicurean error of referring all things to secondary, and denying providential, causes. Horace represents himself as an Epicurean, Epist. I. IV. 16; Sat. I. v. 101. His impulsiveness and inconsistency as to doctrines, he declares Epist. I. I. 14–19.

3. Consultus, "a professor," as in the phrase juris consultus.

5. Diespiter=Jupiter. The two names are akin, and in real meaning the same. The Latin Ju and Jovi, the Gr. Ζεύς, the Sanskrit Dyaus or Dyu (meaning both sky and day) point to a common root, signifying bright. These derivatives, then, form a natural first term to express the idea of God—the Author of light, the Lord of heaven. (See the history of this name and its form in Max Müller's Tenth Lecture on Language, 2nd Series.) In the Vedas the combination Dyauspitar (="Sky Father") is as frequent as Jupiter in Latin. Compare Varro, L. L. v. 66,—'Antiquius Jovis nomen; nam olim Dijovis et 'Diespiter dictus, id est dies (gen. ant.) pater,' quoted by Orelli, who adds 'nunc constat...nihil differre a Gr. Ζεὺς πατήρ.'

6. Igni. Such is the constant form of this ablative. Cp. Carm. I. IV. 3; Sat. I. v. 72; Virg. Georg. I. 234; and Wagner's note and references.

7. Per purum. For the phrase, cp. Virg. Georg. II. 364; for the idea, Hdt. III. 86,—ἀστραπὴ ἐξ αἰθρίης καὶ βροντή. Cp. the 'cælo sereno fulgura' of Virgil, Georg. I. 487; and Hom. Odyss. v. 114.

9. Bruta, "senseless." 'The brute earth,' Milton, in Comus. Comp. 'inertem,' Carm. III. IV. 45.

10. Invisi. Hom. Il. v. 66,—τά τε στυγέουσι θεοί περ.

ib. Tænarus, the south headland of Laconia, C. Matapan, a legendary entrance to Orcus. Virg. G. IV. 467,—'Tænarias fauces alta ostia Ditis.'

11. Eurip. Hipp. 3,—τέρμονες Ἀτλαντικοί; and Herc. F. 234.

13. Cp. Hom. Od. π. 211; Hesiod. ἐργ καὶ ἡμ. 5; Eur. Fragm. Andr. 23.

14. Obscura, the neuter, though used of persons, and in connection with the masc. insignem. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 170.

ib. Apicem, "a point;" then (as here,) used for "a royal diadem," with a probable reference to "the high-peaked Oriental tiara."

15. i.e. Swooping with the dash of an eagle. Cp. 'magno stridore,' Virg. G. I. 407. Cp. the account of Tarquin in Cic. Legg. I. 1. Some interpreters would include, in acuto stridore, the scream of the eagle,—ἐγγύθεν ὀξὺ λελακώς, Hom. Il. χ. 141; ὀξέα κλάζων αἰετὸς ἐς γᾶν ὣς ὑπερέπτα, Soph. Antig. 113.

CARM. XXXV.—AD FORTUNAM.

1. Cp. the invocation to Fortune in Pind. Ol. XII. 1,—

Λίσσομαι, παῖ Ζηνὸς Ἐλευθερίου, Ἱμέραν εὐρυσθενὲς ἀμφιπόλει, Σώτειρα Τύχα.
τὶν γὰρ ἐν πόντῳ κυβερνῶνται θοαὶ ναῦες, ἐν χέρσῳ τε λαιψηροὶ πόλεμοι κἀγοραὶ βουλαφόροι.

ib. Gratum. Sc. 'tibi ut,' Carm. I. XXX. 2, 'dilectam Cypron.' [O.] Those who construe it "pleasant," quote Cic. Att. IV. 8,—'Antio nihil quietius, nihil alsius, nihil amœnius.'

ib. Antium, Torre d'Anzo, the capital of the Volsci. Its Temple of Fortune was celebrated; historically, it is famous for having supplied (after the final conquest of Latium in 338 B.C.) the Rostra at Rome.

2. Τύχη γὰρ ὀρθοῖ καὶ Τύχη καταῤῥέπει τὸν εὐτυχοῦντα τόν τε δυστυχοῦντ' ἀεί. Soph. Ant. 1158.

And Cp. Virg. Æn. XI. 426.

ib. Præsens occurs nowhere else with an infinitive, but is not a more strained construction than 'blandus ducere,' or 'lenis aperire.' It is equivalent to (though of wider meaning than) 'valens.' It is so used in Virgil, Geor. III. 452,—'Non tamen ulla magis præsens fortuna laborum est.'

4. Funeribus triumphos. Compare, in Livy. XLV. 41, the speech of Æm. Paullus,—'Spectaculo vobis nunc triumphus meus, nunc funera liberorum meorum fuerint '...triumphus meus velut ad ludibrium casuum humanorum duobus funeribus 'liberorum meorum est interpositus.'

5. Cp. Eur. Suppl. 552,— τρυφᾷ δ' ὁ δαίμων, πρός τε γὰρ τοῦ δυστυχοῦς ὡς εὐτυχήσῃ τίμιος γεραίρεται, ὅ τ' ὄλβιός νιν πνεῦμα δειμαίνων λιπεῖν ὑψηλὸν αἴρει.

6. Ruris colonus, i.e. 'ruricola.' "You are honoured by the dwellers on land and sea."

7. Bithyna, "of Bithynian timber," as 'Pontica' above, Carm. I. XIV. 11. This traffic with Bithynia is also alluded to in Carm. III. VII. 3.

8. Carpathium, part of the Ægean, near Carpathus (Scarpanto), north of Crete.

9. Dacus, the tribes bordering on the Danube. The frequency of their incursions is implied in Virg. Georg. II. 497,—'Conjurato descendens Dacus ab Histro.'

12. Hence Gray's 'purple tyrants vainly groan,' Ode to Adversity. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 495.

13. μὴ...ἀντρέψῃ ποδὶ ὀλβον, Æsch. Pers. 165.

14. Columnam, their power and prosperity. This has been supposed to refer to Dolabella's overthrow of J. Cæsar's column,—'eversio illius exsecratæ columnæ.' Cic. Phil. I. 2. Cp. ad Attic. XIV. 15,—'columnam tollere.'

ib. Cp. Ov. Met. XI. 377; XII. 241; and Bacchylides, Fr. 34.

ib. Frequens. So 'frequentioris populi,' in Cic. pro Sest. 59.

17. Sæva. The v.r. 'serva' is in many of the best MSS.; but I see in the old Hl. A. (which has serva, the r introduced above, and the gloss dura,) the cause of the corruption, and a testimony against it. The cause is the writing e for ae, (see on S. I. III. 7;) but the synonymous gloss dura attests the true word. The subsequent insertion of r is a copyist's mistake.

18. This has been supposed to be taken from a picture. The symbols aptly represent the grasp and strength of Destiny. Cp. Carm. III. XXIV. 5.

ib. Clavos, "nails," as in Pind. Pyth. IV. 71. Æsch. Suppl. 440, 944. Cuneos, "wedges," to tighten the masonry. Uncus, "rivets, or cramps," to hold it together. Plumbum, "molten lead," to set them more firmly: used proverbially in Eur. Andr. 267,—εἰ πέριξ σ' ἔχει τηκτὸς μόλυβδος.

ib. Trabalis. Virg. Æn. XII. 294. 'Cl. tr.' is used as a proverb, Cic. Verr. V. 21,—'Ut hoc beneficium, quemadmodum dicitur, clavo trabali figeret.'

22. Nec comitem (se) abnegat. Ovid has the same construction,—'Siqua repugnarat nimium, comitemque negarat,' A. Am. I. 127. [M.] quotes Val. Flacc. III. 695,—'An sese comitem tam tristibus actis abneget.' "Nor scruples to be your companion still, though in altered and gloomy guise you retire from scenes of prosperity." Pind. Nem. X. 78,— παῦροι δ' ἐν πόνῳ πιστοὶ βροτῶν καμάτου μεταλαμβάνειν.

28. Jugum. Theocr. XII. 15,—ἐφίλησαν ἴσῳ ζυγῷ.
'Quid agam, si proxima quæque relinquunt?
Subtrahis effracto tu quoque colla jugo?' Ov. Trist. V. II. 39.

29. Ultimos. Virg. Ecl. I. 67,—'Penitus toto divisos orbe Britannos.' The construction of the gen. after ultimos is parallel to ἐσχάτη χθονός, Æsch. P.V. 846.

30. Recens examen. The expedition referred to above, Carm. XXIX. Examen is strictly a compound of agmen, but commonly used of a swarm of bees, and in this sense might be compared with Æsch. Pers. 128.

33. Sceleris...fratrumque (a species of hendiadys), the slaughter of our brethren in civil war. Cp. sup. Carm. I. 11.

34. Dura refugimus ætas. Cp. Epod. XVI. 9, and a like construction in Livy, XXVII. 51,—'Tum omnis ætas currere obvii.'

35, 37. Solon, Frag.,—φθόνῳ' ἱερῶν κτεάνων οὔτε τι δημοσίων φειδόμενοι.

39. Diffingas, "fashion anew and differently, for a different purpose." 'Recoquunt patrios fornacibus enses,' Virg. Æn. VII. 636. προχαλκεύει δ' Αἶσα φασγανουργός, Æsch. Choeph. 647.

ib. Retusum. So Virg. G. II. 301; Ov. Am. II. 9.

40. Massagetas, a Tartar tribe of Scythia intra Imaum.

CARM. XXXVI.—AD PLOTIUM NUMIDAM.

An Ode of welcome to Pl. Numida, on his return (with Augustus, it is supposed) from the Cantabrian war.

7. Dulci, "dear.", 'Amicus dulcis,' Sat. I. III. 69.

8. Non alio, "the same." (Orell. Cp. Tac. Germ. V.) "They had been boys together under the same teacher."

9. Mutatæ...togæ. The young Romans upon "coming of age" changed the toga prætexta for the toga virilis. This change, which was accompanied with marked rejoicing, might take place any time after the age of fifteen. (See Becker's Gallus, Exc. II. sc. 1.) Toga libera, and liberior, in Ov. Fast. III. 771, and Trist. IV. X. 28, express the independence then attained, with a reference also to the Liberalia (March 17,) as the usual day for the ceremony. Cp. ξυνέφηβοι, Lucian, Timon, 47.

10. Cressa. Adj. from creta, "chalk." Cressa and Cressius are common as adjectives, from Creta, the proper name; not, as here, from creta, the substance. A white mark, or white stone, distinguished lucky events or days. See Sat. II. III. 246,—'creta, an carbone.' Cp. Pers. Sat. II. 1; and 'dies ater,' in Ovid. Fast. I. 58. This custom is ascribed to the Thracians in Plin. VII. 40. Comp. Catull. LXIX. and CVIII; also Mart. XII. 34, sqq.; and IX. 52. So λευκὸν ἦμαρ, in Æsch. Pers. 301; a natural metaphor.

11, 12. "Let there be no limit to the wine, no check to the dances." Promptæ, participle. Promo (proëmo) is the constant phrase for drawing wine. So promus (Sat. II. II. 16) "a butler."

12. Salium. Generally understood to be for Saliorum, but more probably an adj. from Salius, a word used by Varro. The Salii were the priests of Mars, 'a saltu nomina dicta,' Ov. Fast. III. 387. See mention of them in Virg. Æn. VIII. 285; and again, 663,—'exsultantes Salios.'

13. Multi...meri, i.e. a noted drinker. The sense is, "Let even Damalis be surpassed in deep drinking."

14. Amystide, Gr. ἄμυστις. Eur. Rhes. 419; Cycl. 417; Call. Fr. 109.

16. Apium. Virg. Ecl. VI. 68.

ib. Breve, "short-lived," contrasted with vivax. So Carm. II. III. 13.

17. Putres, "melting, languishing." Cp. τάκεαι ὀφθαλμώς, Theocr. I. 91. Persius, S. V. 58, borrows the word,—'In Venerem est putris.'

18. Nec=non tamen. The sense is,—"Damalis before all the guests shall cling to and welcome Numida."

20. Ambitiosior, used in the primary sense, as derived from ambio, "clinging to." Cp. Eur. Hec. 398,—ὁποῖα κισσὸς δρυὸς ὅπως τῆσδ' ἔξομαι. So Catull. LXI. 34; and Ov. Heroid. V. 47,—

'Non sic appositis vincitur vitibus ulmus,
'Ut tua sunt collo bracchia nexa meo.'

CARM. XXXVII.—AD SODALES.

A congratulatory Ode, on occasion of the deaths of M. Antony and Cleopatra. The opening of it is from Alcæus, Fr. 20,— νῦν χρὴ μεθύσθην καὶ χθόνα πρὸς βίαν παίην ἐπειδὴ κάτθανε Μύρσιλος.

(I quote Gaisford's and Porson's reading.)

3. Pulvinar deorum. See the Dict. of Antiq., art. 'Lectisternium.' Images of the gods were placed on couches (pulvinaria) with offerings and viands set before them, nearly as Theocritus (Idyll. XV. 111—127) describes the 'Αδώνια. Pulvinar, is used sometimes for the ceremony itself; as by C. Nepos, in Timotheo 2,—'Ei. Deæ (sc. Paci) pulvinar sit institutum.' Cp. 'Pulvinaribus altis dignior,' (i.e. "worthy of divine honours") Ov. Met. XIV. 827.

4. Tempus erat, "it were time," i.e. "we ought." Cp. Ov. Am. III. I. 23; Trist. IV. VIII. 25. Tempus, ὥρα, as in Soph Aj. 245; Œd. Tyr. 466.

7. Dementis='dementer cogitatas; fere ut (Virg. Æn. II. 576) sceleratas..... poenas.' [O.]

9. "With her degraded crew of infamous followers." 'Turpium, ut contaminato, imprimis ad animum refertur.' Orell. With this description may be compared, in a general way, what Livy (IX. 17) says of Darius' army and Alexander's march.

13. i.e. The loss of all her fleet. See, for the construction, the note on Carm. II. IV. 10.

14. Lymphatam, "panic-stricken." Gr. νυμφόληπτον. The superstition is expressed in Ov. Heroid. IV. 50,—

'Dryades Faunique bicornes
'Numine contactas attonuere suo.'

Lymphata is in Virg. Æn. VII. 377. Lymphaticus pavor, "a panic," Liv. X. 28.

14. Mareotico. Cleopatra's mind is said to be overset, not by a deity's (e.g. Pan or Apollo's) intervention, but by wine; a reflection on her luxury and its effects. The Lacus Marcotis supplied Alexandria with its southern port, and a communication with the Nile. The surrounding country was celebrated for its wines. Mareotides Albæ are amongst the vines mentioned Virg. Georg. II. 91.

17. Accipiter velut. Cp. Æsch. P. V. 856,—ἐπτοημένοι φρένας κίρκοι πελειῶν ὀν μακρὰν λελειμμένοι ἥξουσι θηρεύσοντες. Hom. Il. φ. 493; χ. 139; Virg. Æn. XI. 721; Ov. Met. V. 606; Eur. Andr. 1141.

21. Fatale monstrum. Orelli quotes Lucan, X. 58,—'Latii feralis Erinnys.'

22. Nec muliebriter. Cp. Ov. 'animi matrona virilis,' Fast. II. 847.

24. Reparavit, etc. "Nor did she make for, or gain other realms in place of those which she had lost;" a sense of reparo not found elsewhere, but in agreement with the derivation: paro is "to provide," and re in compounds has often the sense of diversion or substitution. So above, V. 15 'redegit.'
The propriety of the perfect tense, expressing the simple fact, may be noted. Merivale, Hist. Rome, vol. III. ch. XXVIII. p. 332, says,—'She had undertaken '...to sail far away to some secure regions beyond the reach of the conqueror, 'whose pursuit she dreaded.' Had the impf. (nec reparabat) been used, it would have meant she did not purpose or attempt to fly, which would have been untrue.

26. The mode of Cleopatra's death was never ascertained. The tradition is discussed in Merivale, Hist. Rome, ch. XXVIII. pp. 343—4.

27. Serpentes, the 'geminos angues' of Virg. Æn. VIII. 697. See Shakespeare's Antony and Cleopatra, Act V. Sc. 2.

29. Ferocior, "animated by the thought of death."

30. Liburnis. See the Dict. of Antiq. The Liburnæ naves were light canoes, properly, used by the Liburni of the Illyrian coast.

ib. Invidens, "disdaining to be led in triumph;" more literally, "grudging them the glory of her being so led."

31. Privata, i.e. despoiled of her royal dignity.

32. 'T. Livius refert illam (sc. Cleopatram) ... identidem dicere solitam οὐ θριαμβεύσομαι.'—Schol. Porphyr.

21, sqq. Marvell's Ode on Cromwell's Return from Ireland ends with an evident and a fine imitation of this ode:—

'He (Charles I.) nothing common did or mean,
'Upon that memorable scene,
'But with his keener eye
'The axe's edge did try;
'Nor call'd the gods with vulgar spite
'To vindicate his helpless right;
'But bow'd his comely head
'Down, as upon a bed.'

CARM. XXXVIII.—AD PUERUM.

2. Philyra, Gr. φιλύρα, "the lime, or linden tree;" also the inner rind of it, used for binding chaplets. Ov. Fast. v. 337,—'Incinctis philyra conviva capillis.'

4. Rosa...sera. Cp. Martial,—'hibernæ...rosæ,' IV. XXIX. 4; VI. LXXX.

5. Allabores, i.e. 'cum labore adicias,' "take pains to add." A compound used by Horace only. Curo has the same construction (a subj. without ut) again in S. II. VI. 38. Sedulus is to be taken with allabores.

7. Arta, "close, thick, embowering." The form is for arcta, the c being commonly rejected before t, as in Lutatius (= Luctatius,) autumnus (from auctus,) quintus, tortus, fultus; instanced by Munro, Lucr. I. 70.

Q. HORATI FLACCI CARMINA.

LIBER II.

CARM. I.—AD ASINIUM POLLIONEM.

Caius Asinius Pollio. See Sat. I. x. 42; Virg. Ecl. VIII. 6—13. Historian, poet, orator, general, founder of the first public library at Rome. Ov. Trist. III. i. 71.

1. Motum ... civicum, "the civil wars." Their origin is traced here to the year of the first Triumvirate, B.C. 60. Q. Cæcilius Metellus Celer was consul with Lucius Afranius in that year.

2. Et vitia et modos, "the errors and operations of the war;" or, in a wider sense and with a hendiadys, "unprincipled and ambitious schemes ending in war." (This interpretation suits the temper of Horace, whose regrets are not wont to dwell upon the downfall of persons or parties, but upon the demoralization of his country and the general distress.) Cicero (de Cl. Orat. XCVI. 329) speaks of 'belli civilis causas in privatorum cupiditatibus inclusas.'

6. Alcæ...per ignes. Two metaphors expressing hazard, and that two-fold,—first, of error in facts; then, of political animosity.
Cp. Sall. B. Catil. III,—'Arduum res gestas scribere.' With the first metaphor compare Eur. Rhes. 446,—ῥίπτεις κυβεύων τὸν πρὸς Ἀργείους Ἄρη. And Ib. 183,—ἐν κύβοισι. See Elmsl. on κίνδυνον ῥίπτειν, Eur. Heracl. 149. With the second, Propertius, I. v. 5,—'Miser ignotos vestigia ferre per ignes.' Nearly in this sense, Call. Ep. XLV. 2,—ἐστί τι ναὶ τὸν Πᾶνα κεκρυμμένον ἐστὶ...πῦρ ὑπὸ τῇ σποδιῇ; where see Blomf. note. The literal expression, ὑπὸ σποδῷ ἀκάματον πῦρ, is in Theocr. XI. 51. Orelli cites Suidas, ἐν πυρὶ βέβηκας. Add from Suidas also, ἄνθραξι βαίνειν ἐχθρικὴν δηλοῖ βλάβην. Homer expresses extrication from imminent danger by καὶ ἐκ πυρὸς αἰθομένοιο νοστήσαιμεν, Il. κ. 246.

12. Cp. 'cothurnato vate,' Ov. Am. II. XVIII. 18. (For a full description of the κόθορνος, or cothurnus, see Donaldson, in Theatre of Gr. Ed. VII. pp. 245–8.)

13. Præsidium. Cp. 'Cotta.....Pieridum lumen præsidiumque fori,' Ov. Pont. IV. XVI. 42. Also comp. 'tropidis reis,' Ov. Fast. I. 22; ex Pont. II. II. 52.

16. Delmatico, the conquest of the Parthini in Illyria, B. C. 39.

17. i.e. Pollio's graphic style transports his readers or hearers into the very scenes of war.

18. Perstringis, "strike upon, deafen;" in a kindred signification "to dazzle," as Quintil. X. I. 30,—'Fulgor quo mens simul visusque perstringitur.'
[O.] says,—'Perstringere de auribus acuto vel terribili sono percussis' (i. e. "to deafen;") 'præstringere de oculis subito splendore vel fulmine prope cæcatis' (i.e. "to dazzle.") The distinction is, no doubt, true; per denoting what penetrates to the remoter or inward sense, the hearing or the mental faculty; præ, action upon what is forward or in front, as the eyesight. Yet the words have been constantly confounded, as may be seen in in Gesner's note on Quintilian, l. c. See also Cic. Divinatio, 14,—'præstringat aciem ingenii.'

22. 'Arctoi formosus pulvere belli," Mart. VIII. LXV. 3.

24. Cæsar at Pharsalia, B.C. 48, then in Egypt; in Africa, 46, battle of Thapsus in April; in Spain, 45; B. of Munda; killed in the senate-house, March 15, B. C. 44.

25. Juno, as in Virg. Æn. I. 15–18.

26. Cesserat. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 351.

29. Pinguior. Virg. Georg. I. 492; Ovid, Ep. I. 54. So Æsch. Pers. 806,—φίλον πίασμα Βοιωτῶν χθονί; and S. C. Theb. 587.

37. Ne may be taken as dependent on 'quære modos.' See on I. XXXIII. 1.

38. Ceæ.....neniæ. Simonides of Ceos, the great lyric poet, one of the literary circle at the court of Hipparchus (not to be confounded with the Iambic poet of Amorgos.) Quintil. X. I. 64, says of him,—'Simonidis poetæ tenerrimi præcipua in commovenda miseratione virtus.' Cp. Catull. XXXVI. 8. And so Wordsworth,—'One precious tender-hearted scroll of pure Simonides.'

ib. Retractes, "go out of your way to treat of mournful subjects." In composition, re often gives the sense of diversion or change. As instances, observe Virgil, Æn. III. 383,—'reddita cessit,' "reverted to," (there is no idea there of "restoration.") Æn. VI. 819,—'fasces receptos,' "gained over to the cause of freedom," or simply "transferred." Georg. IV. 424,—'resistit,' "removes or stands aloof." In Æn. VIII. 503, 'resedit' is=consedit, with the idea of a check or repulse. Revoco is not only "to recall," but "to call into a fresh direction," Cæs. B. G. III. 17. So redemissem, Cic. ad Fam. II. 16,—"I would gladly divert to myself."

39. Dionæo..." in the cave of Venus." Dione, the name of the mother of Venus, is sometimes a synonym for Venus herself. Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 19.

40. Cp. 'Cecini plectro graviore Gigantas...Nunc opus est leviore lyra.' Ov. Met. X. 150.

CARM. II.—AD SALLUSTIUM CRISPUM.

The sentiment of this Ode corresponds to, and is, perhaps, taken from Theocr. XVI. 22, sq. It is a question whether it contains more of irony, or counsel, or praise. The subject of it (C. Sallustius, great nephew of the historian) is once mentioned elsewhere (Sat. I. II. 48, sqq.) as an extravagant profligate. In the period intervening between that poem and this (about sixteen years,) he may have grown wiser; perhaps 'modeste munificus,' as he is there described. We learn from Tacitus (Ann. III. 30,) that he was fond of, or at least affected, luxury and elegance (the means for which he had in the wealth left him by his great uncle, who had died B.C. 34;) but that he was really a man of energy as well as influence. During the life-time of Mæcenas, he ranked next to him; after his death, he succeeded him in his place in the counsels of Augustus. He died A. D. 20.

2. Abdito terris. He had valuable copper mines among the Centrones ('in Centronum alpino tractu,' Plin. H. N. XXXIV. 2) to which some have thought allusion is here made.

2. Lamnæ, contraction for lamminæ, any thin sheet of metal: here perhaps a contemptuous term. Cp. Ov. Fast. I. 208.

5. Proculeius, a model of true liberality, quoted as such in Juv. VII. 94: Caius Proculeius Varro Murena, brother of the Murena who was implicated in Cæpio's conspiracy, B.C. 22, and brother of Terentia, the wife of Mæcenas.

8. Cp. Virgil's 'Famam extendere factis,' Æn. X. 468.

9. Regnes. This potential mood expresses less a fact, than a wish or possibility. For the sentiment, cp. Milton, Par. Reg. II. 466,—

'Yet he who reigns within himself, and rules
'Passions, desires, and fears, is more a king.'

11. Jungas, i.e. under your dominion.

ib. Uterque Pœnus, i.e. Spain and Africa, alluding to the Carthaginian colonies in Spain.

13. Cp. Ov. Fast. I. 215,—

'Sic, quibus intumuit suffusa venter ab unda,
'Quo plus sunt potæ plus sitiuntur aquæ.'

This comparison of covetousness to dropsy occurs in Polyb. Hist. XIII. 2.

ib. Indulgens sibi. Juv. XIV. 139,—'Crescit amor nummi, quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.'

17. Cyri solio. See above, on Carm. I. II. 51. Phraates IV. (=Arsaces XV.) succeeded his father, Orodes I. (whom he murdered,) B.C. 38. In consequence of his crimes, many Parthian nobles fled to M. Antony, who marched (B.C. 36) into Parthia, but without any success; and his plans of re-invasion were checked by the civil war between himself and Octavianus. Meanwhile Phraates, provoking a revolution, was driven out, and Tiridates, one of the royal family, was set up. Phraates was restored by Scythian aid. Tiridates fled to Augustus, with Phraates' youngest son. This led to treaties, and the 'signa recepta' in B.C. 20.

21. Diadema, the ensign of royalty: 'trabeam et diadema Quirini,' Juv. VIII. 259. It was a linen fillet ('fascia candida,' Suet. J. Cæs. 79,) not to be confounded with 'corona,' a garland, or conqueror's wreath. (See Trench's Synonyms, p. 91.)

23. Inretorto, "unaverted" eye, undazzled by the glare. The wise man can look steadily at, can face them, 'cogitans cum Socrate quam multa non desidero.' [G.] Ovid, Met. X. 696, uses 'retorserunt oculos,' for "turned away their eyes:" 'nec vultum avertit,' Ib. VI. 642, expresses firm resolution. Consult Bentley on rectis oculis (ὀρθοῖς ὄμμασι, Soph. Œd. T. 1385,) Carm. I. III. 18. Cicero, ad Brutum, Ep. 18, has this metaphor,—'Splendore falsi honoris objecto aciem boni ingenii præstringi posse confidunt.' So also,—'Ut non magis auri fulgor quam gladii præstringat oculos meos; ut ingenti constantia, quod omnes optant, calcem.' Seneca, Ep. 48. Orelli (quoting φεῦγε ἀμεταστρεπτί, from Plato, Legg. IX. 854, C.) gives a different explanation,—'Sapiens adeo contemnit thesauros, æquo et tranquillo animo eos prætericns et videns, ut ne retorque requidem oculos ad illos...dignetur.' So Dillenburger, who refers to Cic. Cat. II. I. 2." We may find this sentiment expressed in the Christian Year, (SS. Philip and James,)—

'Learn to quit, with eye serene,
'Thy youth's ideal hoard.'

CARM. III.—AD DELLIUM.

Quintus Dellius, principally notorious as 'desultor bellorum civilium,' a man of all parties in turn.

1. Æquam...mentem. Cp. Archiloch. Fr. 60; Lucret. V. 1116. So Eur. Fr. Inc. 170, μηδ' εὐτύχημα μηδὲν ὧδ' ἔστω μέγα ὃ σ' ἐξεπάιρῃ μεῖζον ἢ χρεὼν φρονεῖν, μηδ', ἄν τι συμβῇ δυσχερὲς, δουλοῦ πάλιν·

ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἀεὶ μίμνε τὴν σαυτοῦ φύσιν
σώζων βεβαίως.

Ovid borrows the phrase, A. A. II. 438,—'Nec facile est æqua commoda mente pati.

4. Moriture, i.e. "mortal," as Carm. I. XXVIII. 6. Cp. οἱ θανούμενοι βροτῶν, Eur. Heracl. 594.

7. Bearis. Cp. 'hilarans convivia Baccho.' Virg. Ecl: V. 69.

8. Interiore, i.e. the choicest, the oldest cask. Nota, "the seal," i.e. the sealed cask.

9. Quo. The old reading may be taken as=quorsum, interrogatively. "To what purpose is this hospitable shade? why is this hurrying stream here, but to welcome us, to tempt us to enjoyment?" Cp. ἁ πίτυς, ἄπολε, τήνα ποτὶ ταῖς παγαῖσι μελίσδεται. Theocr. Id. I. 2. Cp. also Virg. Geor. IV. 23,—

'Vicina invitet decedere ripa calori,
'Obviaque hospitiis teneat frondentibus arbos.'

Where, too, observe the correspondence of hospitiis frondentibus with hospitalem umbram.

ib. Comp. 'Opportuna sua blanditur populus umbra.' Ov. Met. X. 555.

10. Compare Milton,— ....."To lodge
'Under the spreading favour of these pines...
'To bring me berries or such cooling fruit
'As the kind hospitable woods provide.' Comus, 184–7.

See also Parad. Reg. II. 262. So Shelley,—

'The woods to frame a bower
'With interlaced branches mix and meet.' Revolt of Islam, Dedication.

15. Res et ætas. 'Quia res, ætas, usus, semper aliquid apportet novi.' Ter. Ad. V. IV. 2.

16. Fila...atra. Mart. IV. LXXIII. 3,— 'Ultima volventes orabat pensa sorores,

'Ut traherent parva stamina pulla mora.' Comp. Juv. III. 27.

17. Cedes, etc. Cp. Shakesp. Henry VI. Pt. III. Act V. Sc. 2,—

'My parks, my walks, my manors that I had,
'Even now forsake me; and of all my lands
'Is nothing left me but my body's length.'

ib. Coëmptis saltibus, "bought up,—extensive properties added together." 'Calabris saltibus adjecti Lucani,' Ep. II. II. 178.

21. Pind. Nem. VII. 19,—ἀφνεὸς πενιχρός τε θάνατον πάρα θαμὰ (=ἅμα) νέονται.

Cp. Isthm. VI. 42. Inachus was the most ancient hero of Argos.

23. Moreris. Cic. de Senect. 23,—'Commorandi natura deversorium nobis, non 'habitandi locum dedit.'

24. Nil miserantis. νηλεὲς ἦτορ ἔχων, Hes. Theog. 456; Hom. Il. ι. 158.

25. Ov. Met. X. 32,— 'Paulumque morati
'Serius aut citius sedem properamus ad unam;
'Tendimus huc omnes.'

(So the S. S. Eccles. VI. 6,—'Do not all go to one place?')

26. Urna. This metaphor supposes Fate to hold an urn, in which are placed the names of men; and as each several lot is shaken out, the man's sentence of death takes effect. Carm. III. I. 16.

28. Cumbæ. Eur. Alc. 252,— δρῶ δίκωπον δρῶ σκάφος, νεκύων δὲ πορθμεύς ἔχων χέρ' ἐπὶ κόντῳ Χάρων μ' ἤδη καλεῖ.

Æsch. S. C. Theb. 858,—τὰν ἄστονον μελάγκροκον ναύστολον θεωρίδα. Wagner gives full evidence for this form, cumbæ, though he notes it as an exception to the rule that, in words of Greek origin, y represents v.

CARM. IV.—AD XANTHIAM PHOCEUM.

hias Phoceus=X. the Phocian; an ideal Greek name. See the Philological Mus. Vol. I. p. 452, sqq., where Buttmann contrasts the historical character of the fragments of Sappho with the artificial style of these Odes. 'In Horace, the materials and persons are themselves the product of art: he 'had to create them, just as much as his imagery and his words.'

1. Ancillæ, transl. "a captive" ('fingit amicum veluti heroicis temporibus amare captivam.' O.) Cp. Hom. Il. ι. 842,— ὡς καὶ ἐγὼ τὴν (sc. Briseida) ἐκ θυμοῦ φίλεον δουρικτητήν περ ἐοῦσαν.

Ov. Am. II. VIII. 11,—'Thessalus ancillæ facio Briseidos arsit.'

2. Insolentem. Cp. A. P. 122 [O.] But is not the word used in its proper sense here, "not wont to be moved?" 'Insolenti lætitia,' supra, III. III, is "unwonted," i.e. "extravagant;" in Carm. III. XXIX. 50, "delighting in change;" in Ep. XVII. 75, insolentiæ is paraphrased in Orelli's note 'insolitis artibus.'

0. Ademptus Hector, "the death of Hector, (the fact of Hector's having been slain)."
Cp. 'Cethegus deprehensus'="the arrest of Cethegus," Sallust, Cat. 48. Carm. IV. VIII. 16. Virg. Æn. XII. 280,—'post eruta Pergama.' Ov. F. I. 453,—'defensa Capitolia.' See more instances in Madvig, Gr. 426, and especially one in Thucyd. III. 36, where the usage accounts for the connection of a singular verb with a plural noun. I cannot think Dr. Donaldson right in restoring the plural προσξυνεβάλοντο. In Livy, IX. 5, the editors place a stop after 'lictores abire jussi paludamentaque detracta;' but the verb, 'miserationem fecit,' must be referred to that clause for its nom. case.

1. Cp. Hom. Il. ω. 243; Virg. Æn. IX. 155.

). Leviora. Hom. Il. χ. 287 (Hector ad Achill.),— καί κεν ἐλαφρότερος πόλεμος Τρώεσσι γένοιτο σεῖο καταφθιμένοιο.

7. Scelesta. This adjective may be understood in a general sense, or taken to be an imitation of Theognis and the early Greek Poets, with whom κακὸς stands for "base-born;" ἐσθλός, or ἀμύμων, for "high-born." Compare the usage of δυσγένεια, (="baseness.") Eur. Herc. F. 663.

4. Claudere, i.e. "to close." 'Claudere dicit non condere lustrum censoria formula consulto abstinens.' [O.] The one phrase may remind us of the other, but could not, perhaps, be substituted for it. Condere lustrum (as we may infer from Livy, I. 44) meant seemingly "to offer a lustration by way of completing, or in accompaniment of, the census;" and then, becoming a recognised term for 'facere' or 'instituere lustrum,' would naturally be restrained to that sense.

b. Lustrum, a period of five years. "Suspect not me, who am just forty years old." Ov. Trist. IV. X. 78,——'Novemque Addiderat lustris altera lustra novem;' i.e. was ninety years old. So Trist. IV. VIII. 33,—

.....'Decem lustris omni sine labe peractis
'Parte premor vitæ deteriore meæ.

So Fast. IV. 702. Olympias is sometimes used as lustrum. Ov. ex P. IV. VI. 5,—'quinquennis Olympias;' and Trist. IV. X. 96,—

'Postque meos ortus Pisæa vinctus oliva
'Abstulerat decies præmia victor eques;' i.e. "I was 50."

CARM. V.

1. Ferre jugum. Catull. 68,—'Indomitam ferre jugum docuit.' Plautus. Curcul. I. I. 50,—'Jamne ea fert jugum?' Cp. the Gr. epithets ἄζυξ, ἀδμής, ἄδμητος, as in Eur. Bacch. 694; Soph. El. 1239.

2. Comparis, "yoked together;" metaph. "a consort." Cp. Gr. σύζυξ, σύζυγος, as in Eur. Alc. 342.

5. Eur. Bacch. 866,—ὡς νεβρὸς χλοεραῖς ἐμπαίζουσα λείμακος ἡδοναῖς, Theocr. XI. 2,—μόσχω γαυροτέρα.

6. Juvencæ. Soph. Trach. 539,— ἀπὸ ματρὸς ἄφαρ βέβακεν ὥστε πόρτις ἐρήμα.

So in Eur. Hecub. 52,—σκίρτημα μόσχου σῆς.

7. Solantis. 'Proprie solamur animum; tum dolorem, tum mala et malorum causas;' h. e. 'solando minuimus,' Heyne ad Virg. Æn. I. 238.

10. Immitis uvæ=γλαυκῆς ὀπώρας (i.e. "the uncoloured grape.)" Soph. Trach. 703. The first stanzas compare the youth of Lalage to that of an untamed heifer. Here is a change of metaphor—"the unripe grape." Compare the 'tender autumn,' and the 'fruits ready to drop,' of Æsch. Suppl. 998, 1001,— τέρειν' ὀπώρα δ' εὐφύλακτος οὐδαμῶς.

καρπώματα στάζοντα κηρύσσει Κύπρις, χαλῶσα κωλύουσα θ' ὡς μέμην' ἔρως.

(This last line is a corrected reading, approved by Mr. Paley: I understand it to mean "sometimes letting them go, sometimes checking them, according to the intensity of passion.)"

11. Autumnus. Pindar, Isthm. II. 4, describes youth as 'Αφροδίτας εὐθρόνου μνάστειραν (i.e. "wooing, inviting,") ἀδίστην ὀπωραν.

12. Imitated by Ov. Met. III. 484, and Prop. IV. II. 13. Comp. Hesiod. Scut. Herc. 399,—θέρει...ὁτ' ὄμφακες αἰόλλονται.

ib. Varius may include the transitive sense,—"tinting the uncoloured clusters."

15. Proterva fronte. This is a continuation of the metaphor juvencæ. But see note on E. I. IX. 11; and Cp. Cic. Legg. I. 9,—'Is qui appellatur vultus.....indicat mores.' Comp. Æsch. τοξότιδες, Fr. 224,— αἰδώς τις ἀγναῖς παρθένοις γαμηλίων λέκτρων ὅσαις μὴ βλεμμάτων ῥέπει βολή.

(I submit here also, αἰδώς τις, and ὅσαις, as a conjecture for the corrupt ἄδων ταῖς, and ἄστει.)

18. Sic. Join with ut. "Chloris bright as the moonbeams on the waters."

22. i.e. "A visitor's or spectator's eye could hardly distinguish him from the rest."

23. Solutis. It was customary for the Roman boys to wear their hair long. Cp. Juv. XVI. 136,—'puellares capilli;' and Carm. IV. X. 3,—'humeris involitant comæ;' and Epod. XI. 28.

CARM. VI. AD SEPTIMIUM.

Septimius. A Roman eques, to whom is addressed Ep. I. IX; by some styled Titius S.; a confusion arising from the old comm. on Ep. I. III. 9.

1. Gadis aditure, "ready to accompany me to the world's end, and through every danger." Gadis, 'remotis,' Carm. II. II. 10; Juv. X. 1. Compare Catull. XI. 1—14.

2. Cantabrum. The Cantabri dwelt in Asturias and Biscay. They were conquered by Augustus, 24 B.C. They revolted again, and finally submitted to Agrippa 19 B.C.

3. Syrtis, from σύρω. S. Major and Minor, the Gulfs of Sidra and Cabes, on the African coast, from Tripoli to Tunis.

5. Argeo...colono, i.e. Tiburno. So Martial. IV. LVII. "Let Tibur be my home; or, if that be too great a happiness, Tarentum."

10. Virg. G. II. 197, mentions the pastures in this district,— 'Sin armenta magis studium.....
'Saltus et saturi petito longinqua Tarenti.'

ib. Pellitis, "clothed in skin," to protect their rich fleeces.

ib. Galæsi. Virg. G. IV. 126 (where compare also 'Œbaliæ turribus' with 'regnata Laconi arva'); Martial, VIII. XXVIII. 4.

11. Regnata. So used in Virg. Æn. III. 14; VI. 794.

12. Phalantho, the leader of the emigrant Partheniæ to Tarentum, after the first Messenian war.

14 "Rivalling Hymettus for its honey; Venafrum (in N. Campania) for its olives."

ib. Hymetto; Venafro. Sc. 'melli Hymettio;' 'bacæ Venafranæ.' Cp. C. II. XIV, 28,—'Cenis=cenarum mero.' So C. III. VI. 46,—'avis=avorum ætate.' So C. IV. X. 5; and I. I. 23. So S. II. IV. 3. So Cic. de Orat. I. 4. (15),—'Ingenia .....nostrorum hominum multum ceteris hominibus.....præstiterunt.' Ib. I. 6. (23),—'Eorum...auctoritatem Græcis anteponam.' Tusc. Qu. I. 2,—'Neque cum Græcia,' etc.; and, Virtus...cum majoribus nostris comparanda.' So in Greek, Hom. Il. ρ. 51. (See Heusinger's note on Cic. de Off. I. 22.)

17. Cp. Virg. G. II. 149,—'Hic ver assiduum,' etc.

18. Aulon, perh. αὐλών, a hollow near Tarentum. So Gesner, who quotes Martial, XIII. CXXV,—
'Nobilis et lanis, et felix vitibus Aulon
'Dat pretiosa tibi vellera, vina mihi.'

CARM. VII.—AD POMPEIUM.

Pompeius Varus, an old comrade of Horace, at Philippi, supposed then to have fled to Sextus Pompey, then to have been included in an amnesty and returned. An amnesty is recorded (Vell. Pat. II. 77; Dio, XLVIII. 36) as proclaimed in the year B.C. 39, peace having been made with Sext. Pompey. All the proscribed, except Cæsar's assassins, had liberty to return to Rome. This Ode is mostly referred to that occasion, but Orelli places it after Actium.

1. Tempus ultimum, "extremity of danger." Cp. Cicero's constant usage of tempus for danger and distress; and Catull. LXIV. 151, 169.

3. Redono. A rare word, used again in Carm. III. III. 33, and nearly in the same signification, if Pompeius came back under pardon; but Orelli explains it here by reddo, there by condono.

3. Quiritem (used only in the poets as a singular noun); i.e. in full citizenship. So Orelli. Compare Pers. v. 75,—'Una Quiritem vertigo facit.' Or, no longer a soldier, as in Tac. Ann. I. 42. So Gesner.

8. Malobathro. The oil of the μαλόβαθρον, an aromatic Indian plant. It may be translated "with Syrian cinnamon;" Gr. μαλάβαθρον, "perhaps the betel or areca nut," Lid. and Scott's Lex. (But the betel is a creeper, with a succulent aromatic leaf, used, as in Ceylon, for chewing.) Orelli explains it to be the oil of 'Laurus cassia,' i.e. cinnamon; adding, that the form of the word is a corruption of the Indian Tamalapatram.

10. Relicta...parmula, Archilochus, Anacreon, and Alcæus were all remarked as ῥιψάσπιδες. See Archil. Fr. 5 (quoted in Aristoph. Pac. 1298); Alcæi Fr. 32. The story of the last is related in Herod. v. 95.

11. Minaces. Virg. Æn. x. 817.

12. Hom. Il. β. 418,—πρηνέες ἐν κονίῃσιν ὀδὰξ λαζοίατο γαῖαν. Il. λ. 749,—ὀδὰξ ἕλον οὖδας. Virg. Æn. XI. 418,—'Humum ore momordit.'
Orelli objects to the common interpretation, 'nec turpe per se significare potest 'cruore pollutum,' nec mentum poni pro ore. Idcirco ad alteram expl. redeo 'propositam jam ab Acrone: Turpe solum quo turpiter prostrati precarentur; 'nam ut antea post aciem Pharsalicam teste Cæsare, B.C. III. 98; Pompeiani 'passis palmis projecti ad terram flentes ab eo salutem petierunt, sic etiam post 'Philippensem multi victoris clementiam supplices implorarunt.'

13. Mercurius, patron of poets. See Carm. II. XVII. 29. Of Horace especially, see Sat. II. VI. 5—15. The interposition here ascribed to him is an imitation of the rescue of Paris by Venus, Il. γ. 380; of Æneas by Apollo, Il. ε. 334. Cp. Eur. Hel. 243,— τὸν ὠκύπουν ἔπεμψε Μαίαδος γόνον, ὅς μ᾽...ἀναρπάσας δι᾽ αἰθέρος...ἔθετο.

14, 15. Cp. Eur. Heracl. 427—430: οἵτινες
χειμῶνος ἐκφυγόντες ἄγριον μένος ἐς χεῖρα γῇ ξυνῆψαν εἶτα χερσόθεν πνοαῖσιν ἠλάθησαν ἐς πόντον πάλιν.

15. Resorbens. Cp. Virg. Æn. XI. 627,—'Æstu revoluta resorbens Saxa fugit.'

16. Fretis, abl. c.; but it has been interpreted as a poetic dative, for in freta. Quære—Whether this construction is not assumed too often? whether 'rivo jace' in Virg. Ecl. VIII. 101, 'fluctibus jaciat,' Æn. X. 683, are not ablatives of space, as 'alnus missa Pado,' V. Geor. II. 452? 'It clamor cælo' is thought to be due to a corruption of the old form 'cælom:' (Key, L. Gr. 988, note.) It may at least be compared with the abl. 'it clamor totis muris,' in Æn. IX. 664.

17. Obligatam, "bound on you," i.e. imposed on you as a debt. The participle occurs again in Epod. XVII. 67.

19. Depone. Virg. Æn. VII. 108,—'Corpora sub ramis deponunt.'

ib. Lauru. In C. III. IV. 19, 'lauro.' See Forbiger on Virg. Ecl. VII. 83.

21. Oblivioso. οἶνον λαθικάδεα, Alcæ. 41.

22. Ciboria. A large cup, κιβώριον, like ciboria, the Egyptian bean (or made of the material.)

23. Conchis, "vases." In Sat. I. III. 14, "a salt-cellar."

ib. Udo, "moist" and "fresh;" or, as ὑγρός, "pliant." Cp. Theocr. VII. 68,—πολυγνάμπτῳ τε σελίνῳ.

25. Venus, the highest throw on the dice; the lowest was canis. Propert. IV. VIII. 45; Ov. A. A. II. 205; or vulturius,—'Jacit vulturios quatuor' ("he throws four aces,") Plaut. Curc. II. III. 78.

CARM. VIII.—AD BARINEN.

1. Juris...pejerati, "perjury," the converse of jus-jurandum, "an oath." In these two phrases the pt. in -dus accords with the idea of something to be maintained: the past part. is required to express the breach of it: pejerandi would be improper to signify "that which has been broken." For the sentiment, Cp. Ov. Amor. III. III. 1,—

Esse Deos i crede, fidem jurata fefellit,
Et (sc. tamen) facies illi, quæ fuit ante, manet.'

8. Publica cura, "the general admiration of all." 'The cynosure of neighbouring eyes.' Milton, L'Allegro, 80.

10. Fallere, i. e. to swear falsely by. So Virg. Æn. VI. 324,—'Di cujus jurare timent et fallere numen.'

10, 11. Cp. Virg. Æn. IX. 429,—'Cælum hoc et conscia sidera testor.'

ib. Toto.....cum cælo. Ovid, l. c. ver. 41,—'Toti facio convicia cælo.'

13. Ridet hoc. Tibull. III. VI. 49,—'Perjuria ridet amantum Juppiter.'

15. Ardentis. Cp. Moschus, in Ἔρως δραπέτης· τὰ γὰρ πυρὶ πάντα βέβαπται. The force of the epithets ferus and cruenta may be illustrated from the proverb and its explanation in S. II. III. 275,—'Adde cruorem Stultitiæ atque ignem gladio scrutare.'

24. Aura, a metaphor for "influence." Critics compare Propert. II. XXVII. 15. Orelli connects the term with the metaphor 'juvencis' (v. 21), and interprets it according to the usage in Virg. G. III. 251,—'Notas odor attulit auras.' The latitude with which the poets used the word is evident from Virg. Æn. VI. 204, where it is applied to sight,—'Auri per ramos aura refulsit.'

CARM. IX.—AD VALGIUM.

Caius Valgius Rufus, mentioned again Sat. I. X. 81. Nothing is known for certain of him, but that he was a poet, and of Consular rank. 'Valgius, æterno propior non alter Homero.' Tibull. IV. I. 180. He was consul suffectus B.C. 12.

1. Ov. ex Ponto, IV. IV. 1,—

'Nulla dies adeo est australibus humida nimbis,
'Non intermissis ut fluat imber aquis.'

So Fast. I. 495; Eur. Herc. Fur. 102,— κάμνουσι γάρ τοι καὶ βροτῶν αἱ ξυμφοραὶ καὶ πνεύματ' ἀνέμων οὐκ ἀεὶ ῥώμην ἔχει.

2. Why this mention of the Caspian and Armenia, rather than of the Adriatic and Thrace, with which Horace most familiarly associates his ideas of storms and cold? Probably at this time Rome was full of the nova tropæa (ver. 18) and descriptions of the East. The date usually assigned to the Ode is B.C. 20.

3. Inæquales, "roughening." Used actively, as probably varius, Carm. II. V. 12; as informes, Carm. II. X. 15.

7. Garganus, a mountain and promontory of Apulia.

9. Flebilibus modis, i.e. elegies.

10. Mystes. According to some a favourite son, more probably a friend of Valgius.

10. "Neither at evening nor morning." So Virg. Georg. IV. 466,—'Te veniente die, te decedente canebat.'

ib. Vesper. The morning as well as the evening star. Milton, P. L. V. 166,— 'Fairest of stars, last in the train of night,

'If better thou belong not to the dawn,
'Sure pledge of day———'

So Spenser, F. Q. II. XII. 65,—'That faire starre, the messenger of morne.'

'Stella Veneris quæ φώσφορος Græce, Lucifer Latine dicitur cum antegreditur 'solem; cum subsequitur autem Hesperos.' Cic. N. D. II. 20.

So in Ov. Her. XVIII. 112,—'Prævius Auroræ Lucifer.' Plautus (Amph. I. I. 119) uses the name Vesperugo.

12. Rapidum. 'Solitum apud poetas Solis ἐπίθετον.....propter celerrimum cursum.' [O.] So in Ovid,—

'Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperiona cinctum
'Ne detur celeri victima tarda Deo.' Fast. I. 385.

But it is also used of his "unchecked, scorching heat," as in Virg. Georg. I. 92. Cp. 'rapidus ignis,' Virg. G. IV. 425; and Ecl. II. 10, with Conington's note.

13. Ter ævo functus, Nestor.

τῷ δ' ἤδη δύο μὲν γενεαὶ μερόπων ἀνθρώπων ἐφθίατο.....
...μετὰ δὲ τριτάτοισιν ἄνασσεν. Hom. Il. a. 250, 252.

By later poets the three generations were lengthened into three centuries, as in Ov. Met. XII. 188,—'Vixi Annos bis centum, nunc tertia vivitur ætas.' Comp. Juv. Sat. X. 246.

14. Ov. Heroïd. I. 15,—'Antilochum narrabat ab Hectore victum.' According to Hom. Od. δ. 187, and Pind. Pyth. VI. 32, slain by Memnon.

16. Troïlon, son of Priam. Comp. Virg. Æn. I. 474,—

.....'Fugiens amissis Troilus armis,
'Infelix puer atque impar congressus Achilli.'

A Fragment of Callimachus, referring to his early death (Fr. 363), is quoted as a kind of proverb in Cic. Tusc. II. I. 39,—'Multo sæpius lacrimasse Priamum quam Troilum.' The citation is in these words in Plutarch,—Μεῖον γὰρ ὄντως Τρῶϊλος ἐδάκρυσεν ἢ Πρίαμος· possibly taken, as Blomfield suggests, from a pentameter,—Μεῖον ἐδάκρυσεν Τρῶϊλος ἢ Πρίαμος.

17. Desino commonly has an infinitive following it. Here it has the construction which in Greek belongs generally to verbs of removal or separation from. In Virg. Ecl. V. 19, VIII. 61, desino governs an accusative. So in Ov. Met. VI. 215. In Carm. III. XXVII. 70, abstineo gov. irarum. In Virg. Æn. I. 37, desisto gov. incepto, abl. Cp. Cæs. B. G. V. 11. In Æn X. 441, pugnæ. λῆγε γόων, Bion, in Adonid. ad fin.

18. Novas...tropæa. See the Table of Chronology, B.C. 20. Cp. the description of Augustus' victories in Virg. Georg. III. 27—29.

20. Niphates, now Barema, erroneously spoken of as a river by the later poets, Lucan. III. 245; Silius, XIII. 765; Juvenal, VI. 409.

21. Medum fl. Euphrates. There can be no doubt of this interpretation; and the line in Virgil, Æn. VIII. 726,—'Euphrates ibat jam mollior undis' may be said to confirm it; while it also furnishes an instance of the curiously frequent coincidence in expression and idea of these two poets. The epithet Medus is used with equal latitude by each; e.g. 'Medus Hydaspes,' Geor. IV. 211, whether by poet's licence, or because (as shown in note on C. I. II. 22) it was equivalent to Parthian, and might signify any part of the great Eastern Empire of the day. The idea is adapted by Ov. Fast. I. 286,—'Tradiderat famulas jam tibi Rhenus aquas.' Is it connected with, or suggested by Xenophon's statements of the ebbing of the Euphrates when Cyrus crossed it? ἐδόκει δὲ θεῖον εἶναι, καὶ σαφῶς ὑποχωρῆσαι τὸν ποταμὸν Κύρῳ. Anab. I. IV. 18. Plutarch at a later date affirms the same seeming prodigy in the history of Lucullus.

23. Gelonos, a Sarmatian tribe. 'Pictos Gelonos,' Virg. Georg. II. 115; 'sagittiferos,' Æn. VIII. 725.

24. Exiguis, "narrowed," as having now a limit (præscriptum) set to them.

CARM. X.—AD LICINIUM.

Licinius Murena: after adoption by A. T. Varro, Aulus Terentius Varro Murena. Brother of Proculeius, mentioned Carm. II. II. 5. The ode is a warning (in his case ineffectual) to throw away ambition. See Cowper's translation of this Ode, and reflections. Cp. Eurip. Antiop. Fr. 36,— οὔτε ναύτιλον φιλῶ τολμῶντα λίαν, οὔτε προστάτην χθονός.

Cp. Gray, Ode for Music, stanza 8,—

'Through the wild waves as they roar,
'With watchful eye and dauntless mien,
'Thy steady course of honour keep,
'Nor fear the rocks nor seek the shore.'

5. Auream. Cp. Lucian, Necyom. 4.

ib. Mediocritatem. 'Quæ est inter nimium et parum,' Cic. Off. I. 25. Cp. Eurip. Med. 125—30,—τῶν γὰρ μετρίων, κ. τ. λ.

6. Obsoleti sord. 'Simili verborum compositione Cic. pro Sestio, 28,—virtus... neque alienis umquam sordibus obsolescit.' [O.]

ib. Obsoleti, prop. "over-grown, incrusted with filth." 'Obsoleta sordibus,' Epod. XVII. 46, "of base parentage." Obs for ob in composition is found in ostendo. There is a double antithesis here: tutus, sobrius, sordibus, aula, as in C. II. 1.

10. Cp. Lucian, Charon, 14; Eurip. Fr. 181; Juv. X. 107; and Hannibal's Speech in Liv. XXX. 30,—'Quanto altius elatus erat' (sc. A. Regulus) 'eo fœdius corruit.'

12. Cp. Shakesp. Rich. III. Act I. Sc. III,—'They that stand high have many blasts to shake them;' and especially Lucret V. 1127. So Ov. Rem. Am. 370,—

...'Perflant altissima venti,
'Summa petunt dextra fulmina missa Jovis.' And Trist. III. IV. 5.

13. Cp. Soph. Trach. 297,—ταρβεῖν τὸν εὖ πράσσοντα μὴ σφαλῇ ποτέ. So Eur. Ino, Fr. 21. Also, φόβος συμπαρομαρτῶν, Xen. Cyrop. VIII. VII. 7.

14. Alteram. 'Similiter apud Gr. ἕτερος δαίμων.' Pind. Pyth. III. 34; [O.] Add Eur. H. F. 1238,—κλαίω χάριν σὴν ἐφ' ἑτέραισι συμφοραῖς. So Soph. Phil. 503,—παθεῖν μὲν εὖ παθεῖν δὲ θάτερα. And Livy, IX. 16,—'Nondum alteram fortunam expertus,' (i.e. "a reverse of fortune.")

15. 'Juppiter omnis tempestatis arbiter, C. I. XII. 15: add Arist. Av. 1502.' [M.]

15–17. Theocr. IV. 44,— τάχ' αὔριον ἔσσετ' ἄμεινον· χὠ Ζεὺς ἄλλοκα μὲν πέλει αἴθριος, ἄλλοκα δ' ὗει.

18. Comp. Ov. ex Ponto, IV. VIII. 75,—

'Utque nec ad citharam nec ad arcum segnis Apollo est,
'Sed venit ad sacras nervus uterque manus.'

19. Suscitat. Cp. Pind. Ol. IX. 47,—ἔγειρ' ἐπεών σφιν οἶμον λιγύν. Isthm. VII. 1; Lucr. II. 412.

21. Cp. Soph. Elect. 916,— ἀλλ', ὦ φίλη, θάρσυνε· τοῖς αὐτοῖσί τοι οὐχ αὐτὸς ἀεὶ δαιμόνων παραστατεῖ.

22. Sapienter idem. "Again, you will do well to shorten sail," (i.e. control yourself,) "when in a prosperous course."

23. Contraho. Gr. συστέλλω. Imitated by Ov. Trist. III. IV. 43.

CARM. XI.—AD QUINTIUM.

Quintius Hirpinus. Perhaps the same intimate friend addressed in Ep. I. 16.

1. Scythes. The tribes on the north of the Danube.

3. "Shut off from us by the barrier of the Hadriatic." Objecto=interposito. Cp. Virg. Georg. IV. 503.

4. Usum...ævi, "the supply of what life needs." Usus, "the use or possession of things;" then, the things themselves. Hence the phrase purpurarum usus, for purpuræ, Carm. III. I. 42. Usus olivi, for olivum, Virg. Georg. II. 466. Usus equi, Ov. Fast. V. 592.

5. Poscentis...pauca. 'Man wants but little here below,
'Nor wants that little long.'
Goldsmith's Edwin and Angelina (in Vicar of Wakefield.)

Compare Lucret. II. 20.

6. Levis=imberbis.

9. Comp. Ov. A. A. II. 115. See Wordsworth's Poems on the Affections,—
'Look at the fate of summer flowers,
'Which blow at daybreak, droop ere evensong,' &c.

13. Platano. 'Ministrantem platanum potantibus umbras,' Virg. G. IV. 146.

14. Sic temere. 'Homeri illud, Il. β. 120, μὰψ οὕτω. Plato, Gorg. 506, D. οὕτως 'εἰκῇ. Politic. 295, A. καὶ πως οὑτωσὶ παχυτέρως... Idem usus obtinet apud 'Virg. Æn. I. 224; (add V. 668;) VIII. 488,—'longa sic morte necabat;' ὡς 'ἔτυχε.' [O.] English, "just as we are." (See Munro on Lucret. V. 970.) Temere, "lighty, carelessly." Compare, by way of illustration, Cic. ad Fam. II. 7,—'Non scribo hoc temere'="I mean what I say." Plaut. Aulul. 616,—'Non temere est quod, etc.'="it is not for nothing, that, &c." Ibid. 182,—'Non temerariumst.'

ib. Rosa. Not rose-water or ointment, which is implied in v. 16, but "wreaths:" Eurip. Erecth. Frag. 13,—ἀείδοιμι δὲ στεφάνοις κάρα πολιὸν στεφανώσας. So in Herc. F. 676.

18. Quis. A question, to express a command. Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 595. So above, VII. 23. Cp. Eur. Bacch. 170,—τίς ἐκκαλεῖ, followed by ἵτω τις εἰσάγγελλε; and Soph. Antig. 885. So, "to express a wish," Georg. II. 488.

21. Devium, "living retired," Orelli quotes Liv. III. 13; and Ov. Heroid. II. 118, 'devia avis,' "the lonely owl." 'Apud Ov. Trist. III. VII. 30, devia femina de meretrice.' [D.]

ib. Scortum...cum lyra. Comp. Ter. Ad. Act. V. Sc. IX. 7,—'Cum fide scortum adducere.' (Where consult by all means W. B. Marriott's note, 964.)

23. "Binding her hair simply, not waiting for further ornament." Lacænæ. The Laconian simplicity of dress is well known. For the nodus, as a mark of it, see the description of the Tegeæan huntress (Atalanta),—'Crinis erat simplex nodum collectus in unum.' Ov. Met. VIII. 319.

CARM. XII.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Longa...bella, from 143—133, B.C. Numantia, on the Durius.

2. Dirum. On the propriety of this epithet Orelli quotes Quintil. VIII. II. 9. Bentley reads durum, for the sake of the antithesis to mollibus (as in C. IV. I. 7), with the support of many good MSS.; but their authority is outweighed by Quintilian's.

2. Siculum mare. In the first Punic war there were four naval battles; that of Duilius, near Mylæ Portus; that of At. Regulus (Serranus) off the same coast, three years later; that of Manlius and Regulus, in the next year, off Ecnomus; and that of Lut. Catulus, near the Ægates Insulæ, which closed the war.

6. Hylæum, a Centaur. Virg. Georg. II. 457,—'Magno Hylæum Lapithis craterę minantem.'

9. Pedestribus. 'Prosam orationem et quam pedestrem Græci vocant.' Quintil. X. I. 81. πεζῇ τε...καὶ μετὰ μέτρων, Plato, Soph. p. 237, A.

9—11. Tuque.....Mæcenas, melius. Servius, on Georg. II. 42., asserts that Mæcenas wrote a history of Augustus' life. Orelli understands the words in a general sense, "any one would celebrate;" and takes no account of the emphasis on tu and Mœcenas.

12. Cp. Consolatio ad Liviam, 273,—

'Aspicíam regum liventia colla catenis,
'Duraque per sævas vincula nexa manus;
'Et tandem trepidos voltus.' So Propert. II. I. 33; Ov. Trist. IV. II. 45.

13. Licymniæ. Probably a poetical disguise for Licinię; i.e. Terentiæ, Mæcenas' bride, who was of the Licinia gens, and sister of L. Murena and Proculeius. The mention of a sacred ceremony, and her part in it, is adduced by Orelli as internal evidence that she was a Roman lady (matrona, non libertina.) Cp. A. P. 232, and C. IV. VI. 31. The name Licymnia occurs in Virg. Æn. IX. 546,—'Serva Licymnia.'

20. Celebris, i.e. "thronged with worshippers."

21. Achæmenes. Herod. VII. 11. Mygdonias. Hom. Il. γ. 185, 186,— Φρύγας ἀνέρας αἰολοπώλους

Λαοὺς Ὀτρῆος καὶ Μύγδονος ἀντιθέοιο.

26. Ov. A. A. III. 579,—

'Quod datur ex facili longum male nutrit amorem,
'Miscenda est lætis rara repulsa jocis.'

CARM. XIII.—IN ARBOREM, CUJUS CASU PÆNE OPPRESSUS FUERAT.

1. Nefasto. Ov. Fast. I. 47.

5—10. "I could believe him guilty of the greatest crimes." Compare generally Ov. Am. I. XII. 15,—

'Illum etiam qui vos ex arbore vertit in usum
'Convincam puras non habuisse manus.'
'Præbuit illa arbor misero suspendia collo,
'Carnifici diras præbuit illa cruces.'

6. Fregisse. So used in Sallust, Cat. 55; Cic. Verr. V. 42.

8. Colcha, i.e. from Colchis, now Mingrelia, E. of the Euxine, Medea's country, looked upon as a land of sorcery. See Epod. III. 12; XVI. 58.

16. Timet. So above C. II. VI. 14, 'ridĕt;' and I. III. 36, 'perrupĭt;' S. II. II. 47, 'erăt.' See also C. I. XIII. 6. These are by some considered to be not so much instances of the power of cæsura as of archaism, and the retention of the ancient quantity. See Key's Grammar, § 412, and note; and his fuller exposition in the Journal of Education, vol. IX. p. 40. He refers there to Ritschl's Plautus, Prolegom. p. 82, for statements and authorities. The student may also consult Wagner on the Aulularia, Introduction, pp. 18, 19. Lachmann discusses the question in his notes on Lucr. I. 11, and II. 27. In this passage of Horace he reads 'timetve;' and the more this correction is considered, the more plausible it seems. Apart from the metrical question, there is an evident awkwardness in combining the two adverbs, ultra, aliunde, without a conjunction. The use and position of ve would be the same as in S. II. III. 139,—'Non.....aususve.'

17. Sagittas. 'Vere sublimi imagine eundem Israelitarum timorem a pharetratis Assyriis expressit Jeremias V. 16,—Ἡ φαρέτρα αὐτῶν ὡς τάφος ἀνεῳγμένος." [O.] Sagittas et fugam. Virg. Georg. III. 31,—'Fidentemque fuga Parthum versisque sagittis.' So Milton, P. Reg. III. 323,—

'How quick they wheeled, and, flying, behind them shot
'Sharp sleet of arrowy showers against the face
'Of their pursuers, and overcame by flight.'

19. Robur, the dungeon of death at Rome; Liv. XXXVIII. 59,—'In robore et tenebris exspirat.' The earliest prison at Rome was the Carcer of Ancus Martius, Juv. Sat. III. 314, to which was added afterwards the Tullianum of Servius.

21. Furvæ, an old word, used especially as an epithet of the regions of death. Cp. Ov. Met. V. 541. Said to be akin to 'fuscus' and 'uro,' and therefore to signify burnt brown, dusky. But Liddell and Scott's Lex. seems to connect it with ὀρφνὸς and ἐρέφω.

23. Discretas. See Epod. XVI. 63. Cp. Virg. Æn. VIII. 670,—'secretosque pios.'

24. Æoliis. Sappho and Alcæus were the two great leaders of the Æolian school of lyric poetry. Sappho calls her house μουσόπολον οἰκίαν: it is conjectured that she was the centre of a literary society, in which she may have had rivals. Gorgo and Andromeda are mentioned as ἀντίτεχνοι. (The imputations brought against her by the comic poets (Cp. Ov. Ep. XV.) and sometimes implied in the explanations of this passage, are refuted by Welcker; and see Muller's Literature of Greece.) They were contemporary with Pittacus, who held his power as αἰσυμνήτης, 588—579 B.C. Alcæus' share in the hardships of the civil war is alluded to vv. 27, 28.

26. Cp. Ov. Ep. XV. 30; A. A. I. 206.

ib. Aureo...plectro. Pind. Nem. V. 24; Eur. Herc. F. 351. Quintilian assigns rather a fanciful emphasis to the adjective, lib. X. I. 63.

28. Dura fugæ mala. Virg. Æn. III. 160,—'Longumque fugæ ne linque laborem.'

30. Mirantur is used here with acc. and infin. instead of the simple acc. So, in Carm. II. IX. 19, cantemus has both constructions following it.

31. Tyrannos, probably the leaders of the popular party, as Myrsilus (see note on C. I. XXXVII. 1), Megalagyrus and the Cleanactidæ, by whom Alcæus, who was on the side of the nobles, was exiled. Pittacus also, when invested with supreme power, was attacked by the poet in his odes. Melanchius, however, a former tyrant of Lesbos, is praised by him in Fragm. 21. (On the origin and age of the word τύραννος, see the Greek argument to the Œdipus Tyrannus.)

32. Densum umeris, "crowding up."

33. Virg. Geor. IV. 471; Ov. Met. X. 41, sqq.

34. Centiceps. Ἀΐδεω κύνα χαλκεόφωνον πεντηκοντακάρηνον. Hesiod, Theog. 312. Ἀΐδου τρίκρανον σκύλακα, Soph. Trach. 1098.

35. Intorti ..angues. Æsch. Choeph. 1049; Virg. Georg. IV. 482; Catull. LXIV.

37. Pelopis parens, Tantalus, of whose punishment see Odyss. λ. 582; and Lucr. III. 980.

38. Laborum decipitur, "has his sufferings beguiled." 'Fallere curam, laborem,' is a common phrase; so 'decipitur labor' might be used. This seems to be an instance of the partitive genitive; as the vetus Scholiastes explains it. "He has a part of his labours taken from him." Key, in Lat. Gram. 940, says,—'Verbs of removal or separation have a gen. in old writers and poetry; so in Horat. 'abstineto irarum, desine querellarum;' and (which just corresponds to this passage), 'me laborum levas.' Plaut. Rud. I. IV. 27,—'Nec sermonis fallebar,' "nor was I cheated out of what they said." Plaut. Epid. II. II. 55.

39. Orion. Odyss. λ. 572,— 'Ωρίωνα πελώριον εἰσ*ε*νόησα θῆρας ὁμοῦ εἰλεῦντα.

40. Lyncas. Virg. Georg. III. 264.

CARM. XIV.—AD POSTUMUM.

2. Labuntur. Ov. Met. XV. 179; Fast. VI. 771.

ib. Nec Pietas, etc. Ov. Am. III. IX. 37. Cp. Solon, XV. 9,— οὐδ' ἂν ἄποινα δίδοὺς θάνατον φύγοι οὐδὲ βαρείας νούσους οὐδὲ κακὸν γῆρας ἐπερχόμενον. So Mimnermus, Frag. V. 6.

4. Indomitæ. Αἴδης τοι ἀμείλιχος ἠδ' ἀδάμαστος, Hom. Il. ι. 158. So Æsch. Niobe, Fragm. 147.

5. Trecenis. "300 bulls (three hecatombs) every day." Orelli compares the vow mentioned in Livy, XXII. 10,—'Bubus Jovi trecentis.' Lucian (in his apparent reference to this passage, θεῶν ἐκκλ. 13,) seems to have understood it thus.

Compare Isocr. Areop. 145,—οὐδ', ὅπυτε μὲν δύξειεν αὐτοῖς, τριακοσίους βοῦς ἔπεμπον, ὅποτε δὲ τύχοιεν, τὰς πατρίους θυσίας ἐξέλειπον.

There is some question whether the line does not mean "one victim offered every day all the year round," 300 being put as a round number for 365. (Mr. Conington in his Translation quotes, and approvingly, Ritter, as suggesting this.) But the adoption of the distributive 'trecenis' is against it.

ib. Quotquot eunt dies. Compare the Homeric phrase for ὁσημέραι, Odyss. ξ. 93.

7. Ter amplum. Lucret. V. 28,—'Tripectora tergemini vis Geryonai.'

'Forma tricorporis umbræ,' Virg. Æn. VI. 289.

τὸν τρισώματον.....βοτῆρ' Ἐρυθείας, Eurip. Herc. F. 423.

8. Tityon. Hom. Odyss. λ. 576; Virg. Æn. VI. 595; and Lucret. III. 984—94; who allegorizes this myth, and, in the following lines, those of Sisyphus and the Danai genvis; making Tityus typify the victim of passion; Sisyphus, a restless ambition; the Danaïdes, unsatisfied desire. The lines on Tityus are the original of Gray's,—'These shall the fury passions tear,

'The vultures of the mind.'

9. Omnibus. Ἀΐδα παγκοίνου λίμνας, Soph. Elect. 138.

10. Hom. Il. ζ. 142,—οἳ ἀρούρης καρπὸν ἔδουσι.

11. Enaviganda, "to be crossed once for all;" e in composition expressing thoroughness, finality.

14. Fractis...fluctibus. Virg. Æn. I. 165; X. 292.

15. Per autumnos. Alluding to the malaria and the sickly season of autumn. So Carm. III. XXIII. 8; Sat. II. VI. 19; Juvenal, Sat. X. 221.

18. Cocytos. Virg. Æn. VI. 132; Georg. IV. 478; and Milton, P. L. II. 579,—

'Cocytus named of lamentation loud
'Heard on the rueful stream.'

The epithet languido is thought to represent Pindar's βληχρός in Thren. 1,—βληχροὶ δνοφερᾶς νυκτὸς ποταμοί.

19. Damnatus...laboris. An unusual construction, but compared by the Scholiast with the common damnatus capitis.

20. Sisyphus. Hom. Od. λ. 593.

23. Cupressos. Planted near tombs. See the story in Ov. Met. X. 106—42,—'Tristisque deus, "Lugebere nobis, Lugebisque alios, adorisque dolentibus," 'inquit.'

24. Brevem, "short-lived." So Carm. II. III. 13; especially Carm. I. XXXVI. 16, where it is opposed to vivax.

27. Tinget pavimentum. Cp. Shakesp. Timon, Act II. Sc. II,—'Our vaults have wept with drunken spilth of wine.' Cic. Philipp. II. 41,—'Natabant pavimenta vino.'

28. Pontificum...cenis. Martial, XII. XLVIII. 12.

CARM. XV.—IN SUI SÆCULI LUXURIAM.

1. In illustration of the extravagance and extent of Roman villas at this time, Cicero is quoted, pro Milone, 20 and 31,—'substructionum insanis molibus.' Ep. ad Quint. III. I. 5,—'villarum insaniam.' Sallust, Cat. B. 13, illustrates also the concluding reflections of this Ode,—'Operæ pretium est cum domos 'atque villas cognoveris in urbium modum exædificatas visere templa Deorum, 'quæ nostri majores religiosissimi mortales fecere.' [M.] quotes also Plin. Ep. II. 17; but his later date must be remembered. [O.] quotes Tac. Ann. III. 53. On the luxury of the age, and the piscinæ of such men as Lucullus and Hortensius, see Merivale's Rome, Vol. I. ch. II. p. 89. (His anecdote from Velleius Pat. is in Scrip. Romani, Etonæ, p. 261, sect. 'Lucullus.')

3. Viso, frequentative of video, "to look at often, or attentively." θεάομαι.

4. Stagna. The extent of these artificial lakes may be implied, Ep. I. XVIII. 63.

ib. Platanus. Pliny, XII. 1. Platanus cælebs, the converse of 'amicta vitibus ulmo,' Epist. I. XVI. 3.

5. Violaria; 7. Olivetis. The termination -arium or -etum gives nouns a collective meaning. In Greek, such nouns end in -ων or -ωνία, as ἐλαιών, olivetum; ἰωνία, violarium; ῥοδεών or ῥοδωνία, rosetum or rosarium: so δενδρών, ἀμπελών, ἰτεών.

6. Myrtus, nom. plur. See Forbiger, note on Virg. Ecl. VII. 6.

ib. Copia narium. A curious phrase for sweet-smelling flowers. Narium. This word is common in Satiric, but not in other poetry, as applied to persons. Used of animals, it occurs frequently in the Georgics. In construction, the genitive is objective.

8. Horace complains that ornamental shrubs and flowers take the place of useful plantations. Comp. Quintil. VIII. III. 8.

10. Ictus. ἡλίου βολαί, Eur. Bacch. 458. θέρμ' ἡλίου τοξεύματα, Incert. ap. Stob. Flor. Grot. 393. 'Ictus, verbera solis,' Lucret. V. 486, 612, etc.

11. Cato. The Censor, born 234 B.C.; Censor 184. Intonsi. Cp. Carm. I. XII. 41. 'Anno demum U.C. 454 (=B.C. 300) tonsores e Sicilia Romam venerunt.' Plin. H. N. VII. 59.

14. Decempeda, "a ten-foot rod."

16. Porticus. Juv. VII. 178—83; and Ov. A. A. I. 67. The public porticoes were numerous at Rome. See E. I. I. 71; and VI. 26.

17. Cæspitem. Virg. Ecl. I. 69,—'Pauperis et tuguri congestum cæspite culmen.' Turf was good enough for private, marble was reserved for public and sacred buildings. Compare Cic. pro Flacco, 12; and Ov. Fast. I. 203,—'Frondibus ornabant quæ nunc Capitolia gemmis.'

20. Novo. 'Non redivivo lapide, sed novo et vivo.' Lambinus.

CARM. XVI.—AD GROSPHUM.

Pompeius Grosphus, a wealthy Sicilian, recommended (Epist. I. 12) to the notice of Iccius, then farming Agrippa's estates in Sicily, in these terms,—

'Nil Grosphus nisi verum orabit et æquum.'

2. Prensus, in a storm; as 'deprensis,' Virg. Georg. IV. 421.

3. Certus is used for "clear, unshaded;" as 'incertus' (Virg. Ecl. V. 5,) for "chequered, fitful." Cp. Tibull. I. IX. 19.

5. Bello furiosa Thrace. Eurip. Hecub. 1088; Virg. Æn. III. 13; Gray's Progress of Poesy,—'On Thracia's hills the lord of war,' &c.

9. i.e. Neither wealth nor power can calm disquietude.

10. Summovet. Properly used of the lictor's office,—'I, lictor, summove turbam,' Livy, III. 48 and 45: used generally, Carm. II. XVI. 10; XVIII. 21.

14. Compare— 'Sit mihi mensa tripes et 'Concha salis puri.' Sat. I. III. 14.

A description of content. Splendet, joined with tenui, expresses the character,—'In neutram partem cultus miser.' Sat. II. II. 66, viz. "elegance with frugality."

16. Sordidus. Sat. II. II. 53.

17. Fortes, i. e. beyond our power; fancying ourselves strong and secure, though our life is short, ib. Jaculari. 'Plane ut Gr. τοξεύειν, Eur. Hec. 603; Suppl. 745.' [M.] Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1196.

18. Quid...mutamus. Orelli compares Virg. Georg. II. 512.

21. Comp. Lucret. II. 48; and III. 1063.

27. Nihil...beatum. Cp. Eur. Stheneb. Fr. 1,—οὐκ ἔστιν ὅστις πάντ' ἀνὴρ εὐδαιμονεῖ. Bacchylides, Fr. 1.

29, 30. The best comment on this is Juvenal's Tenth Satire.

30. So Mimnermus (ψόγος γήρως,)—Τιθωνῷ μὲν ἔδωκεν ἔχειν κακὸν ἄφθιτον ὁ Ζεὺς γῆρας.....

35. Bis...tinctæ. Gr. δίβαφα. Compare Plin. IX. XXXIX. 63,—'Huic (sc. violaceæ 'purpuræ) successit dibapha Tyria, quæ in libras denariis mille non poterat 'emi..... Dibapha tunc dicebatur quæ bis tincta esset, veluti magnifico 'impendio.' Comp. Ov. A. A. III. 170,—'Quæ bis Tyrio murice lana rubes.' Cicero uses the word jestingly, to signify official rank, ad F. II. 16,—'Curtius 'noster dibaphum cogitat, sed eum infector ("the dyer") moratur.'

37. Cp. Bacchyl. Fragm. 28. (Infra, XVIII. 7, note.)

39. Non mendax, "sure; unfailing in the fulfilment of their decrees." Compare 'voraces,' C. Sæcul. 25; and Persius, v. 42,—'Parca tenax veri.' So Orelli.

Genius is represented as the gift of Fate in Pind. Ol. IX. 26–28; also in Nem. IV. 41–43; where the poet infers from it his own eventual triumph over detraction; as Horace may be said to do here.

CARM. XVII.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Seneca, Ep. 101, has preserved some lines of Mæcenas, expressing his dread of death,— 'Vita dum superest bene est,
'Hanc mihi, vel acuta
'Si sedeam cruce, sustine.'

(See Merivale's Hist. of Rome, vol. IV. ch. XXXVI.)

1. Exanimas. Cic. pro Milone, 34 (93,)—'Me quidem exanimant et interemunt 'hæ voces Milonis.'

3. Mearum...rerum, "my prosperity," or more simply=mei, as in Gr. τὰ ἐμὰ=ἐγώ. But Cp. E. I. I. 103; and Juv. VII. 22.

5, 7. Carm. I. III. 8. 'Thyself mine own self's better part.' Adriana to Antipholus, in Comedy of Errors, Act III. Sc. II. Cp. Ov. Trist. IV. X. 32,—'Cum 'perit (sc. frator) et cœpi parte carere mei.' (On the sentiment and its sincerity, see Preface, pp. xiii, xiv.)

10. Sacramentum, properly a deposit as "caution-money" in a law-suit; so called because, if forfeited, it was applied to sacred purposes: afterwards, "an oath" (as here;) properly the military oath of obedience to the general.

11. Supremum carpere iter. τὰν νεάταν ὁδὸν στείχουσάν, Soph. Antig. 807.

13. The sense is,—"No dangers shall part me from you (Cp. Epod. I. 5–14;) such is my wish, and (vv. 16—21,) the will of Fate, which has linked our destinies together."

17. Libra; Scorpius; Capricornus. For mention of these, as Zodiacal signs, see Virg. Georg. I. 208, and I. 33; and Cicero's translation of Aratus, in Nat. D. II. 44. For their astrological character, comp. Manil. Astron. IV. 548 (as quoted by Orelli,) where the description under Libra may probably be a reference to Augustus. (See Heyne on Virg. Georg. I. 33.)

ib. Adspicit, i. e. as the star of my horoscope; an ellipse, to be supplied from the following clause.

18. Pars violentior, i.e. exercising the most powerful influence on my nativity.

20. Hesperiæ. The influence of Capricorn is placed by the poets in the West. Manil. IV. 791; Propert. IV. I. 86. But "the western wave" here, as in I. XXVIII. 26, simply means the seas round Italy.

21. Cp. Pers. Sat. V. 45–51. 'Sidus triste minetur Saturni,' Juv. VI. 569.

22. Jovis...tutela. Comp. 'Prosperus et salutaris fulgor qui dicitur Jovis,' Cic. in Somn. Scip. 4.

28. Sustulerat, (answered by) levasset: so Virg. Æn. II. 55, (where see Wagner's note;) Æn. IV. 19; VIII. 522; XI. 112 and 115. The usage which first attracts attention in such passages as these, viz. the adoption of an indicative for a potential mood, is common in Greek and English also. See on Sat. II. I. 7. But the idiom of nisi is to be remarked. Here it is an equivalent for—"But Faunus intercepted the blow." In Æn. VIII. 522, the sense is, "they were thinking over ... or beginning to do so..... But Venus gave a sign to cheer them." The imperfect or incomplete idea is more marked in Virgil's putabant, but it exists here in sustulerat. (So especially in Tac. Ann. III. 14, quoted by Orelli.) In Cic. Ep. ad Fam. IV. 5,—'Malum; nisi hoc pejus sit' means "It is painful; yet this would be more so." Compare the frequent nisi forte, as in Cic. Parad. 4: "Yet you thought perhaps," is nisi forte.....arbitrabare; "or perhaps he can," is nisi forte...potest. This last usage takes an indicative.

29. Mercurialium, i.e. "poets." Compare Carm. I. 10.

32. Ov. Trist. I. X. 43,—'Cadet agna Minervæ;
'Non facit ad nostras hostia major opes.'

CARM. XVIII.—AD AVARUM.

1. Ebur. Bacchyl. Fr. 27,—χρυσῷ δ' ἐλεφάντι τε μαρμαίροισιν οἶκοι. Cic. Parad. 1,—'Marmoreis tectis ebore et auro fulgentibus.' Ebur is interpreted as=eburneum by the Schol.; if so, we may compare aurum for currus aureus in Virg. Æn. V. 817.

2. Renidet. Lucret. II. 27.

3. "I have no marbles from Hymettus and from Africa." Trabes, "the architraves," Epistylia, (see Dict. of Antiqq.) Cp. Senec. Thyest. 646,—'Auratas 'trabes variis columnæ nobiles maculis ferunt.' Cp. Becker's Gallus.

ib. Hymettiæ. 'L. Crassus orator (see the Life in the Biogr. Dict.) primus peregrini 'marmoris columnas habuit in eodem palatio Hymettias.' Plin. XXXVI. 3; Ib. 6,—'M. Lepidus primus omnium limina e Numidico marmore in domo 'posuit magna reprehensione.'

4. Recisas. Is this compound used simply for excisas, "hewn out," or in its more exact sense (as M. explains it,) "rounded off, shaped, polished?"

7. Bacchyl. Fr. 28 (an invitation to the Dioscuri,)— οὐ βοῶν πάρεστι σώματ' οὔτε χρυσός, οὔτε πορφύρεοι τάπητες, ἀλλὰ θυμὸς εὐμενής,

Μοῦσά τε γλυκεῖα καὶ Βοιωτίοισιν ἐν σκύφοισιν οἶνος ἡδύς.

9. "I have no clients whose wives or daughters pay court to me by presents of embroidery." So the Scholiast.

ib. Cp. Ov. Am. I. III. 7-11:

'At Phœbus, comitesque novem, vitisque repertor,
'Hoc faciant; (sc. me commendent) et, me qui tibi donat, Amor:
'Et nulli cessura fides,' etc.

10. Benigna, "liberal, free." The opposite of malignus. So Lucan, IX. 500, describes a scanty stream as 'parva maligna Unda procul vena.' Cp. Forbiger ad Virg. Æn. VI. 270,—'Sub luce maligna.'

11. Me petit. Cic. ad Fam. XIII I. 1.

14. The Sabine villa and farm bestowed on him by Mæcenas.

18. Locas, "you are contracting to have marble cut"... Loco is the converse of conduco, or redimo. The owner of the property locat, the builder conducit, opus faciendum.

19. Cowley:

'Why dost thou build up stately rooms on high,
'Thou who art underground to lie?
'Thou sowest and plantest, but no fruit must see,
'For Death himself is reaping thee.'

21. 'Cæruleæ mole fugantur aquæ,' Ov. A. A. III. 126. Summovere, "to push forward, advance." The construction is governed by urges,—a rare construction and meaning. Cp. Virg. Æn. VII. 226,—'Si quem tellus extrema refuso 'Submovet oceano;' i.e. the dwellers on the extreme confines of the earth.

24. Cp. Goldsmith's Traveller,—

'Opulence, her grandeur to maintain,
'Leads stern depopulation in her train, &c.'

And the Deserted Village,—

'The man of wealth and pride
'Takes up a space that many poor supplied.'

ib. Revellis. This passage is quoted and adapted by Quintil. Decl. XIII. 2,—'Lex Numæ extat, 'Qui terminum exarassit ipsius (? ipsus) et boves sacri sunto.'

25. This crime was denounced by the Twelve Tables,—'Patronus si clienti fraudem fecerit, sacer esto.' Yet, that it was not uncommon, see Sal. Jugurtha, 41.

27. Cp. Tyrtæus, F. I. 4, describing expulsion in war,— πτωχεύειν

πλαζόμενον σὺν μητρὶ φίλῃ.

29. "Yet there is no abode more surely awaiting the wealthy possessor, than that "determined by the end (or final power) of Orcus." Mr. Conington's note gives a lucid and convincing paraphrase of this: 'The rich man.....makes 'contracts which he may never see executed (v. 17); meantime Death, more 'punctual than any contractor, more greedy than any encroaching proprietor, 'has planned with his measuring line a mansion of a different kind, which will 'infallibly be ready when the day arrives.'

30 Destino, "to fix firmly." Of the same root as (στάω,) ἵστημι: obstinatus is another compound.

34. Satellles. Sc. οὐπὶ κώπῃ ψυχοπομπός.....Χάρων, Eur. Alc. 361, and 440.

36. Auro captus. Cf. Æsch. Fragm. Niobe, 147.

ib. Hic. 'Orcus, non 'sat. Or.' Charon.' [O.]

38. Levare A poetic or a Greek construction, after vocatus.

40. Cp. the Delphic oracle in Thuc. I. 118,—καὶ παρακαλούμενος καὶ ἄκλητος. But the phrase is probably founded on Æsop's fable of the old man calling for death.

CARM. XIX.—IN BACCHUM.

Gesner quotes Juv. VII. 62,—'Satur est cum dicit Horatius "euhoe."'

1. Cp. Pratinas, Hyporch. 1,— ἐμὸς ἐμὸς ὁ βρόμιος· ἐμὲ δεῖ κελαδεῖν, ἐμὲ δεῖ παταγεῖν ἀν' ὄρεα σύμενον μετὰ Ναιάδων.

For a description of the exploits of Bacchus, compare Ov. Met. IV. 11, sqq.; Trist. V. III.

4. Capripedum. So Lucret. IV. 580.

5. Soph. Trach. 216, sq.,— ἀείρομ', οὐδ' ἀπώσομαι τὸν αὐλὸν...

ἴδού μ' ἀναταράσσει
εὐοῖ μ' ὁ κισσὸς ἄρτι βακχίαν ὑποστρέφων ἄμιλλαν.

7. 'Fas vidisse fuit, fas sit mihi visa referre,' Ov. Her. XVI. 63.

10. Eurip. Bacch. 142,— ῥεῖ δὲ γάλακτι πέδον, ῥεῖ δ' οἴνῳ, ῥεῖ δὲ μελισσᾶν νέκταρι.

13. Conjugis, "Ariadne." See Ov. Fast. III. 459, sqq.; Art. Am. I. 558,—'Sæpe reges dubiam Cressa corona ratem.'

14. Pentheus, king of Thebes. Ov. Met. III. 513.

16. Lycurgus, in his madness, slew his son, and maimed himself, Ov. Fast. III. 722: according to Hom. (Il. ζ. 130), was blinded; according to Sophocles (Antig. 958), was shut up in a rock.

19. 'Pars sese tortis serpentibus incingebant.' Catull. LXIV. 259. (See the whole passage.) Comp. Eur. Bacch. 103.

20. Bistonidum, "Thracian women." Sine fraude, "without injuring them." The phrase occurs again in Carm. Sæc. 41.

23. See Eurip. Ion, 216,— καὶ Βρόμιος ἄλλον ἀπολέμοισι κισσίνοισι βάκτροις ἐναίρει Γᾶς τέκνων ὁ Βακχένς.

28. Ἄρεώς τε μοῖραν μεταλαβὼν ἔχει τινά, Eur. Bacch. 302.

ib. Medius, 'cum gen.' a Greek construction="in the midst of," i. e. involved in, surrounded by. The phrase is represented in Spenser, F. Q. II. IX. 4,—

'Far reach her mercies, and her praises far,
'As well in state of peace, as puissance in war.

The construction of this passage has been obscured, and needless difficulties raised, by taking medius as the predicate. This involves the assigning a new and unauthorised sense to the word, viz. that of æque aptus. A yet greater objection seems to be, that sed is made superfluous, not to say incorrect. For idem, in its semi-adverbial sense, stands properly by itself, especially if it denotes contrariety; though when it denotes addition, (and may be translated "again, besides, likewise,") it admits et, que, even tamen, in combination with it. In Ovid, cited at p. 4, at idem is wrong: Merkel correctly edits et. Here I think it clear that the rendering which suits both context and usage is this,—"but you were the same in the midst of peace and war."

30. Cornu. ταυροκέρων θεόν, Eur. Bacch. 100; and in v. 1017. ταῦρός, δράκων, λέων, are all forms of Bacchus, probably (in their origin) as astronomical signs; his worship being constantly identified with that of the Sun. So in the Orphica,—Ἥλιος ὃν Διόνυσον ἐπίκλησιν καλέονται. To which Thirlwall, Hist. Greece, ch. 53, adds, in a note, that 'in the Indian mythology the sun has the name of 'Suradevas, or the Wine-God.' So Herodotus (II. 42, 144,) makes Osiris, the god of the Nile and the Sun, the same with Dionysus.

CARM. XX.—AD MÆCENATEM.

2. Biformis, metamorphosed into a swan, ver. 10. So Pindar (Carm. IV. II. 25) is 'Dircæus cycnus.' Cp. Eurip. Fragm. Inc. 102. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Q. I. 30 (59),—'Cycni...Apollini dicati;' and the allusion in Call. Apoll. V. So Theogn. 231,—σοὶ μὲν ἐγὼ πτέρ' ἔδωκα, κ.τ.λ. So Pind. Pyth. V. 107,—ποτανός.

4. Invidia major. Above, Carm. II. XVI. 40. Compare Callimachus, Ep. 22, of himself,—ὁ δ' ἤεισεν κρείσσονα βασκανίης. Cp. G. Withers (Shepherds Hunting),—

'So...shall it be
'With Detraction's breath and thee;
'It shall never rise so high,
'As to stain thy poesy.'

5. Non ego...obibo. Cp. Ov. Am. I. XV. 41,—'Etiam cum me supremus adederit 'ignis Vivam.'

6. Quem vocas, "whom you call for;" i.e. whose society you desire. Nearly as Carm. II. XVIII. 10,—'me petit.'

11. Superne, a word used again in the Ars P. 4; used with e short in Lucret. VI. 544, and 597,—'Tecta supernĕ timent, metuunt infernĕ.'

13. Dædaleo. From the double Greek form δαιδάλεος and δαιδάλειος, the quantity of the penult. e is common. For the hiatus, comp. Carm. I. XXVIII. 24, Epod. XIII. 3; and see the numerous examples collected by Orelli.

13. Ocior Icaro. Bentley finds fault both with the metre and the meaning, and proposes tutior. Comparing Ov. Trist. III. 4,— 'Quid fuit ut tutas agitarit Dædalus alas,

'Icarus Icarias nomine signet aquas,' Lachmann (on Lucr. III. 374) approves the conjecture in these words,—'Sententia unice postulat Bentleianum tutior.'

14. Gementis. 'Gemerentque repleti Amnes,' Virg. Æn. V. 806.

18. Marsi, the bravest of the brave. Carm. III. v. 9.

19. Peritus. During the last century of the republic, a love of literature was fostered in Spain. Sertorius did much to encourage it. In Epist. I. xx. 13, Ilerda is mentioned as a seat of learning. Of Latin authors, Quintilian probably, Martial certainly, was a Spaniard. So was Hyginus, the librarian of the Palatine, and Columella, and Seneca, and Lucan.

21. 'Nemo me lacrimis decoret nec funera fletu
'Faxit. Cur? volito vivu' per ora virum.' Ennius, Cic. Tusc. I. 15.
Cp. Milton's Lycidas, 165–6.

ib. Inani, "empty," needless, where there is no corpse. Compare tumulus inanis, used of a memorial tomb, Virg. Æn. III. 304; κενὸς τάφος, of a pretended tomb, Eurip. Hel. 1057.

22. Turpes. Cp. 'deformis,' Ep. XIII. 18. [O.] quotes Ov. A. A. I. 534,—'Nec facta est lacrimis turpior.'

Q. HORATI FLACCI CARMINA.

LIBER III.

CARM. I.

An Ode in exposure of men's vain ambition, and in praise of content.

1. Odi profanum. ἐκάς ἐκάς ὅστις ἀλιτρός, Call. in Apol. 2. 'Procul, o procul esto, profani,' Virgil, Æn. VI. 258. These were formulæ used by the celebrants in ancient solemnities, to prevent ill-omened interruption.
Cp, Arist. Ran. 353,—εὐφημεῖν χρὴ κἀξίστασθαι τοῖς ἡμετέροισι χοροῖσιν ὅστις ἄπειρος τοιῶνδε λόγων, ἢ γνώμῃ μὴ καθαρεύει, ἢ γεννάιων ὄργια Μουσῶν μήτ' εἶδεν μήτ' ἐχόρευσεν.
Horace, as the Musarum sacerdos, imitates their style, and claims attention to his non prius audita, i.e. the truths in which (unrecognised generally) he will initiate his hearers. With the term sacerdos, compare Virg. Æn. VI. 645; Ov. Am. III. VIII. 23.

2. Favete linguis, "use only good words, or keep silence." Comp. inf. Carm. III. XIV. 12; and Ov. Fast. I. 71–74. The Greek is εὐφημεῖν, εὐφημία, (which, it is worth observing, is also used by Plato, Alcib. II. 20, of "reverent prayer," in opposition to βλασφημεῖν, "to offer a foolish or presumptuous one.")

5. Greges, "peoples," as kings are ποιμένες λαῶν.

7. Comp. the satirical title in Lucian, Timon, 4,—Γιγαντολέτωρ. Call. H. in Jov. 3,—πηλογόνων ἐλατῆρα.

8. Supercilio. Taken from the well-known description,—
.....ἐπ' ὀφρύσι νεῦσε Κρονίων
.....μέγαν δ' ἐλέλιξεν Ὄλυμπον. Hom. Il. α. 528.
Thus rendered by Virgil, Æn. IX. 106,—'Annuit, et totum nutu tremefecit Olympum.' With nuo, nutus, is connected numen, "the Divine will, power, majesty."

9. Est ut, 'usu venit, ut,' Orelli. "It is the case; it is ordained that men should vary in wealth and condition ... but (æqua lege, sq.) in the event all are equal, all 'await alike th' inevitable hour.'

ib. Latius ordinet. There is a kindred mode of expressing greater wealth in Epod. I. 25. Ordinet. Virg. Georg. II. 277,—'Indulge ordinibus.'

11. Descendat, i.e. aim at public honours. The elections (comitia) were held in the Campus Martius. Descendat is the exact verb to express a contest, "to descend into the arena." So in E. I. IX. 11. (In Liv. XXVI. 18, the phrase is used of the citizens attending,—'Civitas...in campum descendit.') Cp. Æsch. Choeph. 455,—καθῆκειν. Soph. Trach. 504,—κατέβαν. Thucyd. VI. 16.

16. Urna. See on Carm. II. III. 26.

17. Destrictus ensis, like Damocles. Cic. Tusc. V. 21. Obs. that he is an example of a general truth. Cp. Pers. III. 40, (of the terrors of a guilty secret,)—
'Aut magis auratis pendens laquearibus ensis
'Purpureas subter cervices terruit..... ?'

18. Compare Lucret. IV. 1131,— 'Eximia veste et victu convivia, ludi,
'Pocula crebra, unguenta, coronæ, serta, parantur
'Nequiquam; quoniam medio de fonte leporum
'Surgit amari aliquit quod in ipsis floribus angat.'

22. Lenis. Shakespeare's epithet,—'Sleep, gentle sleep.' Henry IV. Pt. 2, Act. III. Sc. I. Obs. the order of words,—'Sleep, gentle that it is, disdains not.....'

23. Cp. Virg. Georg. II. 470,—'At frigida Tempe.....
'.....Mollesque sub arbore somni
'Non absunt.'

25. Desiderantem, i.e. "the contented man."

26. Cp. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice (in the opening scene,)—
'Your mind is tossing on the ocean,' sqq.

27. Arcturus, or Arctophylax, "the Bear-ward," sets Oct. 29th.

ib. Sævus...impetus. Cp. στυγνὸς ἐπ' Ἀρκτούρῳ ναύταις πλόος, Epigr. Alcæi. [M.] quotes Plautd. Rud. 70,— 'Arcturus signum sum omnium acerrimum,
'Vehemens sum exoriens, cum occido vehementior.'

28. Hædi. They rise on Oct. 6*th.* Cp. for their stormy character, Theocr. VII. 53. 'Pluvialibus Hædis,' Virg. Æn. IX. 668. Both constellations are mentioned together in Virg. Georg. I. 204.

30. Mendax, "disappointing," as Ep. I. VII. 87; and, 'Ceres dominum fallebat,' Ov. F. IV. 645.

30–32. i.e. "While the failure in the crop is attributed either to excessive rain, or heat, or frost."

33. Here is a picture of wealth and its favourite plans. Cp. Carm. II. 15.

36. Terræ, gen. governed by fastidiosus. "Not content with the space allowed him on land." Carm. II. XVIII. 20.

39. Triremi="yacht." 'Locuples quem ducit priva triremis.' Ep. I. I. 93.

37–40. "Rich as he is, he cannot escape fear and care."

41. Phrygius, i. e. the marble of Synnada in Phrygia, a beautiful white, with reddish spots. The legend of it is mentioned by Statius, Silv. I. V. 36,— 'Ipse cruentavit maculis lucentibus Attis.'

CARM. II.

An Ode in praise of the hardy patriotic manly virtues, with an intimation of their dependence on religion.

1. Virg. Æn. IX. 607. Cp. Eurip. Fr. Alex. 15,— κακόν τι βούλευμ' ἦν ἄρ' εἰς εὐανδρίαν ὁ πλοῦτος ἀνθρώποισιν αἵ τ' ἄγαν τρυφαί· πενία δὲ δύστηνον μὲν, ἀλλ' ὅμως τρέφει μοχθοῦντ' ἀμείνω τέκνα καὶ δραστήρια.
Where note the correspondence with Shakespeare's 'Sweet are the uses of adversity.' Cp. also Fr. Inc. 30, ending with οἱ γὰρ πόνοι τίκτουσι τὴν εὐανδρίαν.

7. Virg. Æn. XI. 475, 877.

8. So Helen (Hom. Il. γ. 153, sqq.) comes to the ramparts to see the battle; and so in the picture of the besieged town in Hesiod's Shield of Hercules, 242,— αἱ δὲ γυναῖκες ἐϋδμήτων ἐπὶ πύργων χάλκεον ὀξὺ βόων.....

11. Leonem, i.e. "his lion-like foe." Θυμολέοντα, Hom. Il. ε. 639.

13. Compare Tyrtæus, VII. 1,—τεθνάμεναι γὰρ καλόν, κ. τ. λ. Virgil, Æn. II. 317,—'Pulchrumque mori succurrit in armis.' There is a paraphrase of this and the two next Stanzas, by Mr. Pitt: see Life by Lord Stanhope, vol. III. p. 65.

14. πολλάκι δηιοτῆτα φυγὼν καὶ δοῦπον ἀκόντων ἔρχεται.....ἐν δ' οἴκῳ μοῖρα κίχεν θανάτου. Callin. Fragm.

17. Repulsæ nescia, "unconscious of (i. e. independent of) the popular neglect." Repulsa, properly "a rejection when suing for office." Cp. Cic. ad Fam. I. 5,—'Nec siquid non obtinuerimus repulsi esse videamur. Tuæ sapientiæ mag-'nitudinisque animi est, omnem amplitudinem et dignitatem tuam in virtute '.....positam existimare.'

18. Cic. pro Sest. 28,—'Lucet (sc. Virtus) in tenebris, splendetque per se semper, neque alienis unquam sordibus obsolescit.'

19. Secures, i.e. the fasces—the insignia of office. The honours virtue claims are 'what nothing earthly gives, or can destroy.'

ib. Cic. de Off. I. XIX. 12,—'Qui ex errore imperitæ multitudinis pendet, hic in magnis viris non est habendus.' Cp. also Xen. An. II. v. 23.

20. Popularis auræ, i.e. "popular caprice." Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 817; and Liv. XXX. 45,—'Militaris favor an popularis aura;' and XXII. 26,—'Auram favoris popularis.' So Cic. de Harusp. 20,—'Longius quam volnit popularis aura provexit.'

21. Immeritis mori, "the great and good, who merit immortality."

22. Negata...via, i.e. leads them by a difficult path. Hesiod has a remarkable description of the path to virtue,— μακρὸς δὲ καὶ ὄρθιος οἶμος ἐς αὐτὴν καὶ τρηχὺς τὸ πρῶτον. Op. et Dies, 290.

23. Cœtus...et udam...humum. Cp. the opening speech of Milton's Comus.

25. Silentio. Taken from a line of Simonides, (a favourite quotation of Augustus,)—ἔστι καὶ σιγᾶς ἀκίνδυνον γέρας. It seems to be here a religious precept, in keeping with the poet's assumed character of ἱεροφάντης. Cp. too Virg. Æn. III. 112,—'Hinc fida silentia sacris,' (i.e. Cybeles.)

26. Vetabo qui, sqq. This is probably an imitation of Call. Ceres, 117; but the best passage for comparison is the warning against ὁμιλίας κακῆς, in Æsch. S. c. Th. 602–4.

ib. Cereris sacrum, the Eleusinian mysteries; or (as Orelli thinks) rather the similar rites naturalized at Rome, celebrated 'longe maximis atque occultissimis cærimoniis,' Cic. Verr. V. 72.

27. Sub isdem sit trabibus. Μήτ' ἐμοὶ παρέστιος γένοιτο. Soph. Antig. 372.

μή μοι γένοιτο μήτε συνθύτης θεοῖς μήτ' ἐν θαλάσσῃ κοινόπλουν στέλλοι σκάφος. Eur. Inc. Frag. 848, (Nauck.)
Call. H. in Cer. 118,—εἴη, μηδ' ὁμότοιχος. Xen. Cyrop. VIII. I. 25,—πλεῖν ... μετὰ τῶν εὐσεβῶν.

31. Cp. ὑστερόποινον...Ἐρινύν, Æsch. Ag. 58; ὑστερόφθοροι, Soph. Antig. 1074. So Eurip. Hec. 1194.

32. Deseruit, etc. "Though the guilty get the start of her, Vengeance will not leave the pursuit." Cp. Eur. Fragm. Inc. 2,— Ἡ δίκη...

.....σῖγα καὶ βραδεῖ ποδὶ
στείχουσα μάρψει τοὺς κακοὺς ὅταν τύχῃ.

Deserere, "to lag behind," is opposed to præcurrere, "to out-strip," in Cic. Off. I. XXIX. 2.

CARM. III.

An ode in praise of a constant and resolute will, exemplified in the heroes (ἥρωες), in Romulus, and in Rome itself.

1—8. 'Octo hos versus inter eculei tormenta recitavit magnus ille Batavus Cornelius de Witte.' [O.]

1. Cp. Cic. Off. I. XXXI. 7.

3. Cp. Juv. VIII. 81,—'Phalaris licet imperet ut sis Falsus,' etc. Compare the story of Theodorus, in Cic. Tusc. I. 43.

4. Mente ... solida. All the commentators quote Simonides here. He describes in ἐπίνικ. 8 (a passage famous among the ancients, see Plato, Protag. LXXII. p. 339, and Heindorf's note) the perfect man as,— χερσίν τε καὶ ποσὶ καὶ νόῳ τετράγωνον;

a metaphor, like Tennyson's for the Duke of Wellington,—

'A tower
'That stood foursquare to all the winds that blow.'

Cp. Virg. Æn. VII. 586,—'Ille velut pelagi rupes immota,' etc.

7. Si fractus. 'Quid si nunc cælum ruat,' a proverb quoted in Terent. Heaut. IV. III. 41. Compare the answer of the Celtic deputies to Alexander, given in Thirlwall's Hist. of Greece, vol. VI. ch. XLVII. So Theognis, 869,—ἐν μοι ἔπειτα πέσοι μέγας οὐρανος.

9. Vagus Hercules, πολύπλαγκτος, Eur. Herc. F. 1197. Compare Virg. Æn. VI. 802, where the wanderings of Hercules are spoken of as proverbial,—'Nec vero Alcides tantum telluris obivit.' (See note on C. I. VII. 23,—'pulsa.')

9, 10. Compare Aristotle (Hymn to Hermias),— ἀρετὰ πολύμοχθε...

σεῦ δ' ἕνεχ' οὐκ Διὸς Ἡρακλέης Λήδας τε κοῦροι πόλλ' ἀνέτλασαν...

Soph. Phil. 726 (de Hercule),—ὁ χάλκασπις ἀνὴρ θεοῖς πλάθει πᾶσιν, θείῳ πυρὶ παμφαής.

10. Igneas. Cic. de N. D. I. 37 (103); Ov. Met. I. 26. Cp. Milton's phrase,—'The empyrean.'

12. Purpureo...ore, sc. labris. Simonid. Fr. 72; Virg. Æn. II. 593.

ib. Bibit. A variation of phrase for "has achieved immortality; is deified like them." Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 79,—'Tu das epulis accumbere divom.'

13. Merentem. Cp. Ov. Trist. V. III. 19,—'Ætherias meritis invectus es arces.'

15. Quirinus. Ov. Fast. II. 475, sqq.

16. 'Simile est deorum consilium apud Eur. Hel. 878.' [O.] Compare generally Juno's speech in Virg. Æn. XII. 820—8.

19. Judex. Virg. Æn. I. 27,—'Judicium Paridis.'

20. Vertit, i.e. evertit. Virg. Æn. I. 20.

21. Ex quo ..... damnatum, "condemned, devoted to destruction, ever since Laomedon," etc. 'Laomedonteæ perjuria Trojæ,' Virg. G. I. 502; Hom. Il. φ. 442—457.

23. Castæ, contrasted with incestus, v. 19.

25. Lacænæ...adulteræ. [M.] and others take this for a dative case; [O.] more simply as a genitive.

28. Cp. Virg. Æn. XI. 289; IX. 155.

29. Nostris ductum sed., "protracted by our divisions," viz. Juno and Minerva siding with the Greeks; Mars, Apollo, Venus, with the Trojans.

30. Resedit. Cp. 'Resides viros, animos,' Virg. Æn. VI. 814; VII. 693.

31—68. Suetonius, Jul. Cæs. 79, mentions, as one of the reports of the time, that J. Cæsar was supposed to entertain a scheme of fixing the seat of empire at Alexandria or Troy; and it may be thought worth remarking, that Constantine did begin to found a city there. See Gibbon's Rome, Ch. XVII.

38. Exsules, i.e. the Trojans and their posterity, settled in Italy.

44. Dare jura. Virg. G. IV. 562.

48. Nilus. The Nile is used proverbially for the most distant part of the world in Eur. Androm. 650.

51. Humanos in usus. Is this accusative to be joined with cogere or with rapiente? [O.] takes it with the latter, for the sake of the opposition, 'inter humanos usus et sacrum quod cum deorum sit exemptum est usui humano.' In that case, humanus (which is properly the opposite of divinus or cœlestis) will be put for profanus; thus creating a difficulty, slight perhaps, yet requiring some examples or explanation to be adduced. I think that to punctuate after usus (as Gesner does) suits the order of words better; also that rapere is more properly constructed by itself. The whole verse (52) is simply=sacrilega manu, as C. II. XIII. 2. [O.] quotes Plaut. Trin. IV. IV. 36,—'Rapere properant qua sacrum qua publicum;' which is a good example of the independent de force of this verb and phrase. Add from Sallust, B. Catil. XI,—'Privatim ac publice rapere.....sacra profanaque omnia polluere.'

53. Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 278,—

'His ego nec metas rerum nec tempora pono,
'Imperium sine fine dedi. Quin aspera Juno,' etc.

66. Auctore Phœbo. Pind. Ol. VIII. 31; Virg. G. III. 36. Cp. Ovid, as quoted on C. IV. VI. 25.

CARM. IV.—AD CALLIOPEN.

An ode to the Muses, acknowledging their beneficent protective power, first for himself, then (as joined with consilium, v. 41.) for the state and its great ruler (v. 37, altum Cæsarem), whose rightful and secure supremacy is compared with that of Jupiter.

2. Longum...melos may be translated "a sustained melody," but it is enough to understand it (with O.) as a mode of saying, "Come, and leave me not hastily or soon." Does it express πολυμελὲς ἀοιδᾶς μέλος, Alcm. Fr. 1? Alcm. Fr. 29 is always quoted as corresponding to this stanza.

2. Calliope. Horace invokes the several Muses (without distinction of their offices) as suits his verse. Cp. Carm. I. I. 33; I. XII. 2; III. XXX. 16. Virgil invokes all under the one name (Æn. IX. 525),—'Vos, o Calliope.'

3. Seu...seu, i.e. 'vel tibia, vel assa voce, vel denique lyra.' [O.] Mr. Conington 'believes, with Ritter, that the alternative is between the pipe as accompanying the vox acuta, and the lyre as accompanying the vox gravis. Horace has 'specified the vox acuta, and left the vox gravis to be inferred.'

9. Fabulosæ, as in Carm. I. XXII. 7. The story is well compared by Addison, Spectator, 85, (and Keble, Prælect. XXVI.) with the old ballad, 'The Children in the Wood.'

10. Altricis=Homerice κουροτρόφος. Cp. Soph. Aj. 863,—ὦς τροφῆς ἐμοί, (sc. πέδια.) So Cic. Tim. 10,—'Terram altricem nostram;' and Ov. Met. IV. 293.

'O Caledonia!.....
'Meet nurse for a poetic child.' Sir W. Scott's Lay, C. VI.

ib. Apuliæ. 'Locus sine dubio corruptus,' [O.] This is implied by the variations of MSS.; by the contradiction of in and extra; and the shortening of the A. See more in Preface, p. vi.

11. Ludo fatigatumque somno, corresponding to the Homeric καμάτῳ ἀδδηκότες ἠδὲ καὶ ὕπνῳ. Il. κ. 98. Properly it is an instance of the figure called zeugma= ludo fatigatum, victumque somno.

13. Quod foret, "a thing which might well be marvellous to all;" viz. "how (ut) I slept in safety." (Miror is followed by ut, "how," in Epod. XVI. 53.)

14. Acherontia, Bantia, Forentum, towns in the neighbourhood of Venusia.

20. 'Sleep as sound as careless infancy.' Shakesp. Merry Wives, Act V. Sc. V.

21. Vester, "under your protection."

22. Tollor, used of mounting a height, in Ov. Met. VII. 779. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 635.

24. Liquidæ, "clear and bright in atmosphere," aeris puri. V. Schol.

26. Versa acies, the rout at Philippi. Carm. II. VII. 9.

27. Devota...arbor. Carm. II. XIII. 1—12. Devota, "accursed."

28. Palinurus, a dangerous promontory S. of Velia, on the Lucanian coast. For its name and legend, see Virg. Æn. VI. 381. Horace is supposed to have been in danger of shipwreck there, in the Sicilian expedition against S. Pompeius in B.C. 36, when the fleet of Octavian was caught in a heavy storm. (See Class. Museum, vol. II. p. 206, Essay by T. Dyer.)

30. Insanientem. 'Insani...fluctus,' Virg. Ecl. IX. 43. So below, C. VII. 6.

33. Britannos...feros. Orelli. Cp. Tac. Ann. XIV. 30.

34. Equino sanguine. Cp. Virg. Georg. III. 463.

ib. Concanum, a Cantabrian tribe on the N. coast of Spain.

36. Amnem, the Tanais.

38. Abdidit is the most common reading. Bentl. preferred reddidit. Orelli reads addidit, i.e. as colonists, confirming the reading by Tac. Ann. XIII. 31,—'Coloniæ...additis veteranis firmatæ sunt.'

41. Lene consilium, "temperate counsels and moderation after victory." Orelli quotes a remarkable parallel from Pind. Pyth. V. 61,— δίδωσί τε Μοῖσαν οἷς ἂν ἐθέλῃ ἀπόλεμον ἀγαγὼν

ἐς πραπίδας εὐνομίαν

But this Ode, in the general, seems framed after the 1st Pythian (see the argument there, with the remarks on it, in Cookesley's edition.) Consilium, a trisyllable, as below Carm. VI. 6; and as connubia, Virg. Æn. VII. 555.

44. Fulmine...caduco. καταιβάτης κεραυνός, Æsch. P. V. 359.

45. There is a triple antithesis: 1. Terram, mare; 2. Urbes (men, as living social communities), and regna tristia, "the cities of the dead;" 3. Divos, mortales.

ib. Inertem. Cp. 'terris et inerti sede,' Ov. Met. XV. 148.

48. Unus, i.e. as a monarch. ἀφήμενος, Hom. Il. ο. 106; θεῶν ἄτερ ἥμενον ἄλλων, Il. ε. 753. Comp. Æsch. Suppl. 592—7. Compare also the remarkable distinction in Xen. Mem. IV. III. 13,—Ὁ τὸν ὅλον κόσμον συντάττων τε καὶ συνέχων.

ib. Æquo, "undisturbed, calm sway;" answering in some degree to the epithet lene, v. 41; "the gentle rule," where the sovereignty is sure.

52. Virg. Georg. I. 280.

54. Statu, "attitude." Shakespeare uses "station" in this sense, Hamlet, Act III. Sc. IV.

56. Enceladus. Virg. Æn. III. 578. Cp. too Eurip. Ion, 209,— λεύσσεις οὖν ἐπ' Ἐγκελάδῳ γόργωπον πάλλουσαν ἴτυν;

Λεύσσω Παλλάδ' ἐμὰν θεόν
. . . . .
ὁρῶ, τὸν δαΐον Μίμαντα πυρὶ καταιθαλοῖ.

57. Sonantem. Observe the force of this, and Cp. Virg. Æn. X. 568,—'streperet clipeis.' So Æn. XII. 712.

ib. Ægida. Eur. Ion. 996,—ἣν αἰγίδ' ὀνομάζουσι, Παλλάδος στολήν.

58. Avidus, λιλαίομενος πολέμοιο. Il. ν. 36,—Ἥφαιστος.....σθένεϊ βλεμεαίνων. [O.] Yet the epithet may be chosen also as distinctive of the god of fire.

59. Matrona Juno. πότνια Ἥρη. See Ars Poet. 116.

63. Silvam. 'In Cyntho, Deli monte.' [O.] Observe the correspondence of the epithet and the descriptions—Patareus answering to Lyciæ dumeta; Delius, to natalem silvam.

65. Cp. Pind. Pyth. VIII. 15, sqq. with this line, and the whole preceding context. Cp. also Eur. Fragm. II. Temenidæ,—ῥώμη δέ γ' ἀμαθὴς πολλάκις τίκτει βλάβην.

66. Vim temperatam. Cp. Tac. Ann. I. 67,—'Ea (sc. arma) consilio temperanda.' And Thucyd. III. 48,—ὅστις εὖ βουλεύεται, κ. τ. λ.

67. Odere. Eur. Hel. 903,—μισεῖ γὰρ ὁ θεὸς τὴν βίαν.

74. Partus. Virg. G. I. 278.

78. Additus, "set over him." Orelli cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 90,—'Teucris addita Juno;' and quotes from Lucilius, XIV. 6,—'Si mihi non prætor siet additus, atque agitet me;' and, in the same sense, appositus, Suet. Tib. 22.—'Tribunus militum custos appositus.' [M.] refers to Drakenborch on Silius, II. 595; and to Tacit. Ann. IV. 67: and see Ann. II. 68.

CARM. V.

An ode upon Roman patriotism, and the example of it in Regulus.

1, 2. Cp. Ov. Fast. II. 131; Trist. IV. IV. 19.

2. Præsens, in opposition to cælo regnans. 'ἐπιφανής. Comp. Ov. Trist. II. 54,—Præsentem conspicuumque Deum.' Ch.: so Orelli.

3. Cp. Ovid, A. A. I. 177,—

'Ecce parat Cæsar domito quod defuit orbi
'Addere; nunc, Oriens ultime, noster eris:
'Parthe, dabis pœnas; Crassi gaudete sepulti.'

Add especially Fast. V. 580—590.

5. Conjuge barbara turpis maritus. Cp. E. II. II. 72, and note; also E. I. XV. 12. See Wagner on Virg. Æn. IV. 517,—'Ablativus in his indicat habitum quendam vel modum nec statuenda, ut fieri solet, ellipsis præpositionis 'cum.' [O.] takes the abl. simply to depend on maritus, as in Ov. Her. IV. 134,—'fratre marita soror.'

7. Cp. Cic. in Catil. I. 2,—'O tempora! O mores!'

9. Marsus et Apulus, reckoned amongst the best soldiers in Italy. Virg. Georg. II. 167.

10. Anciliorum, the sacred shields of Numa. See Ov. Fast. III. 373—8. Probably derived (as is there supposed) from cædo, so as to mean a shield "cut away all round:" l and d are not unfrequently interchanged in the formation of words; as e.g. in oleo, compared with odor; sedeo, sella.

This passage is imitated by Florus, IV. 11,—'Qui (i.e. M. Antony) patriæ, 'nominis, togæ, fascium oblitus, totus in Cleopatram ut mente, ita animo 'cultuque desciverat.'

ib. Togæ. Virg. Æn. I. 282.

11. Vestæ. Virg. G. I. 498.

12. Incolumi Jove=salvo Capitolio, Sch.; or, "giving up, bidding farewell to his country." See Ars Poet. 222, and Hurd's Commentary.

13. Reguli. M. Atil. Regulus, consul for the second time in B.C. 256, taken captive in the campaign of the following year. He is to be distinguished from C. Atil. Reg. Serranus, the consul of the year preceding.

15. Exemplo trahentis, "drawing from (or, more exactly, by) precedent" (which the senate would set, si non periret, &c.) "assurance of ruin for future generations." Trahenti is only a conjecture.

17. Periret. On the lengthening of the last syllable, see note at C. II. XIII. 16. Perirent has been suggested as a correction, but seems to be (see Orelli) against the genius of the language; unless, as Bentley further suggests, we also read immiserabiles as a plur. nom. with pubes in apposition. Perires is proposed by Lachmann, on Lucr. I. 11.

19. Affixa. θεοῖς λάφυρα...ἐπασσάλευσαν, Æsch. Ag. 578; illustrated by Stanley 587, or Blomf. 561.

22. Cp. Ov. Am. I. II. 31.

23. Non clausas, i.e. "freed from fear of any enemy." So peace is described, Ars Poet. 199, as 'apertis otia portis.' E contr. Virg. Æn. VIII. 385.

26. Flagitio...damnum. Eur. Rhes. 102,—αἰσχρὸν γὰρ ἡμῖν καὶ πρὸς αἰσχύνῃ κακόν.

30. i.e. "Cannot be restored to cowards; lit. those who have deteriorated."

37. Unde vitam sumeret, "from what he derived life and safety," i.e. "to what he should owe it;" viz. to his own good sword, and not to the humour of his enemy. Sumeret may stand for sumere deberet, but need not. Aptius is the reading of Hl. A. with the marginal note 'f. inscius.'

41. Conjugis. Sc. Marciæ.

42. Capitis minor, "one who had lost his rights as a citizen." See Art. 'caput,' in the Dictionary of Antiquities. Cp. Liv. XXII. 60. A Roman, when made prisoner, would lose all civil rights, though he might recover them on returning to Rome: but Regulus, refusing to be ransomed, gave up absolutely his caput, or rank as a citizen. (For the story of Regulus, see Cic. de Offic. I. 13; and III. 26, sqq.)

45. Labantis. Cp. 'labantia corda,' Virg. Æn. XII. 223. Firmaret answers well to it.

53. Clientum.....relinqueret. As if he were retiring to his country-seat, after a friend's cause had been decided—or rather, after having decided it himself; for the patronus was not only the adviser and advocate of his clientes, but the arbitrator in their disputes.

CARM. VI.—AD ROMANOS.

An Ode inveighing against the corruptions of the age.

1. Delicta, properly "neglects," "things left undone," used in S. I. III. 79, 141; A. P. 442. 'Deliquit,' S. I. III. 84. With the sentiment, compare, Eurip. Fr. Alcm. 17,—τὰ τῶν τεκόντων ὡς μετέρχεται θεὸς μιάσματα. [O.] quotes as from Eur. Fr. Inc. 133 (a verse which I cannot find,)—τὰ τῶν τεκόντων σφάλματ' εἰς τοὺς ἐκγόνους οἱ θεοὶ τρέπουσι.

2. Romane. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 852. Used poetically in a collective sense.

ib. Templa refeceris. The care of Augustus for these works is mentioned by Suetonius, Aug. 30,—'Ædes sacras vetustate collapsas aut incendio absumptas 'refecit,' etc. Ovid affirms the same, Fast. II. 59—63. No doubt, by his frequent recurrence to this subject, as well as to the other reforms attempted at this period, Horace designed not to please or compliment Augustus so much as to influence public opinion in support of his administration, and of the measures which promised any hope of recovering the country from its demoralisation, or infusing a generous and patriotic spirit among the ruling classes.

5. i.e. "The power of Rome is owed to the favour of heaven, and based upon religion." Cic. Nat. D. III. 2,—'Quæ (sc. civitas) numquam profecto sine 'summa placatione Deorum imm. tanta esse potuisset;' and, de Harusp. resp. 9. [M.] quotes from Camillus' speech, Liv. V. 51; and from Appius', VI. 41.

9. Monæses et Pacori manus. Pacorus was the son of Orodes (Arsaces XIV.) king of Parthia. The two defeats (bis) here spoken of must be that of Crassus in B.C. 53, and that of Decidius Saxa, thirteen years later, when Pacorus commanded. It is not known who this Monæses was; but the name occurs more than once among the Parthian nobles, and it is thought that he may be the same with Surena, and Surena possibly the titular, Monæses the personal, name. Surena was the commander at Carrhæ.

10. Non auspicatos. True, in the literal sense, of Crassus. Livy, VI. 41 (referred to on v. 5) expresses the Roman estimate of 'auspicia,'—'Auspiciis hanc 'urbem conditam, auspiciis bello ac pace domi militiæque omnia geri quis est 'qui ignoret?' Especially Cic. Divin. I. 18,—'Nihil...nisi auspicato:...M. Crasso 'quid acciderit videmus, dirarum obnuntiatione neglecta.'

12. Renidet, "rejoices;" properly, "shines back, glistens." Cp. from φάος and φαίνω, the signification "cheerful, joyous," in φαιδρός, φαιδρωπός, φαιδρύνω.

14. Dacus. 'Conjurato descendens Dacus ab Histro,' Virg. Georg. II. 497. There were wars with the Dacian and Mœsian tribes in B.C. 30 or 29. M. L. Crassus, proconsul in Macedonia, celebrated a triumph for them in B.C. 29. Æthiops, the Egyptians, i.e. in the fleet of Antony.

19. Hoc fonte...clades (Cp. sup. v. 13.) Rome is her own greatest enemy. Comp. Shakesp. King John, concluding speech,—

> 'This England never did nor never shall > 'Lie at the proud foot of a conqueror,
> 'But when it first did help to wound itself.'

21. Motus...Ionicos, "Greek dances." The Ionians were looked on as effeminate, even in Greece. (See Grote's Hist. vol. IV. ch. XXIV.) Ἰωνικῶς is=ἀβρῶς in Arist. Thesm. 163. So in Propert. I. VI. 31,—'Mollis Ionia;' and, perhaps, in Ov. Ep. IX. 73, 'Ioniacas puellas' involves the same allusion. In Aristoph. l. c. (see Toup's note) the verb διεκλῶντο gives at least some reason for reading here frangitur artubus.

22. Fingitur artibus, "is trained in accomplishments." These two things betrayed, according to Roman manners, a want of modesty. Compare Ovid's references to dancing; and artes, as applied to Lyce, Carm. IV. XIII. 21. So Sallust, B. Catil. 25,—'Psallere et saltare elegantius quam necesse est probæ.'

24. De tenero...ungui, ἐξ ἁπαλῶν ὀνύχων, i.e. from early years. It is objected that this construing is inconsistent with matura, v. 22; and Unger (in Orelli) plausibly interprets the phrase as=penitus, ex imis medullis. So it is in Plaut. Stich. V. v. 20,—'usque ex unguiculis.' And so it may very well be in Cic. Fam. I. VI. 2,—'Præsta te eum qui mihi a teneris, ut Græci dicunt, unguiculis es cognitus.' (There seems no doubt that the Greek term might be used in either sense.)

30. Institor, "an agent," a trader in articles of dress or for the toilet. Joined here with Spanish traders or ship-owners, as in Epod. XVII. 20.

33. Cp. Eurip. Dictys, Fr. 15,—οὐκ ἂν γένοιτο χρηστὸς ἐκ κακοῦ πάτρός.

34. Infecit æquor. Off Mylæ Ptus. in 260 B.C. and Ægates Iæ. 241 B.C.

35. Pyrrhum. B.C. 280–275. His great battles were Heraclea, Asculum, Beneventum.

36. Antiochum, Antiochus the Great, defeated at Thermopylæ, 191 B.C.; at Magnesia, 190 B.C.

37. Cp. Virg. Georg. II. 167,—'Hæc genus acre virum, Marsos pubemque Sabellam,' etc.; and Æn. IX. 603, sqq.

39. Severæ, "strict." So severitas is "strictness."

42. Mutaret umbras. Cp. Virg. Ecl. I. 84; II. 67.

ib. Juga demeret bobus, Gr. βουλυτός. Ov. F. V. 497,—'Tempus erat quo versa jugo referuntur aratra.' Apoll. Rh. IV. 1629,—ἦμος δ' ἠέλιος μὲν ἔδυ, ἀνὰ δ' ἤλυθεν ἀστὴρ Αὔλιος (Cp. Milton's Comus) ὅς τ' ἀνέπαυσεν ὀΐζυροὺς ἀροτῆρας.

43. Amicum tempus, Gr. εὐφρόνη.

46. Avis=avorum ætate. C. II. VI. 14, note. Cp. Hom. Od. β. 276. A constant decay and degeneracy of the world was an Epicurean doctrine; Lucret. II. ad finem. See Conington on Georg. I. 497, and the curious patristic passages cited in Hakewell's Apology, lib. I. pp. 56–60, and 64.

CARM. VII.—AD ASTERIEN.

Asterie, Gyges, fictitious names.

1. Candidi...Favonii. These winds are mentioned, not as favourable to a voyager from Bithynia, but as indicating open weather. (In C. IV. XII. 1, the N. winds are spoken of under the same character.) So Meleager, CX. 9, in his description of Spring,— ἤδη δὲ πλώουσιν ἐπ' εὐρέα κύματα ναῦται

πνοιῇ ἀπημάντῳ Ζεφύρου λίνα κολπώσαντες.

Cp. Plautus, Merc. V. II. 35,—

'Hic Favonius serenust, istic Auster imbricus,
'Hic facit tranquillitatem, iste omnes fluctus conciet.'

Cp. Plin. II. 47,—'Ver aperit navigantibus maria, cujus in principio Favonii 'hibernum molliunt cælum.'

3. Thyna. See Plin. V. 32,—'Thyni ex Europa transiere, a quibus appellantur 'Bithyni.....Tenent oram omnem Thynii, interiora Bithyni.'

5. Oricum, in Epirus, on the inner side of Acroceraunia.

6. Capræ. Ov. F, v. 113,—'Oleniæ (i.e. "Œtolian") signum pluviale Capellæ.'

6-8. Frigidas.....lacrimis. Cp. Ov. Ep. I. 7, 8; (Penelope Ulyssi.)

10. Tuis...ignibus, "with a love like yours."

13. Mulier, Antea (or Sthenebæa) Hom. Il. ζ. 160, sq. Compare Ov. Trist. II. 397; Juvenal, X. 328.

16. Refert. The nuntius tries his constancy in every way; finally by warning him of the danger of refusing, of which danger Bellerophon and Peleus are instances.

18. Hippolyte (or Astydamia,) wife of Acastus, king of Iolcos. This story is related in Pind. Nem. v. 26, sqq.

ib. Dum fugit, a present, depending on the past tense datum. See on I. x. 11.

ib. Abstinens. Contrast incontinens, Carm. III. IV. 77.

21. ὡς δὲ πέτρος ἢ θαλάσσιος κλύδων ἀκούει. Eurip. Med. 28.

ib. Icari. This is probably the gen. of Icarus, which is used alike to denote the island (otherwise Icaria,) and as the personal name. Orelli and others take it as gen. of Icarium, against whom see Lachmann on Lucret. v. 1006.

25. Flectere. Ov. Ep. IV. 80; A. A. III. 384,—'In gyros ire coactus equus.' Cp. Virg. Georg. III. 115.

28. Tusco. Virg. Georg. I. 499.

29. See The Merchant of Venice, Act II. Sc. V.

31. i.e. "Though he reproach you for harshness, remain inaccessible."

CARM. VIII.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Martiis...Kalendis. On this day the Matronalia were kept, in honour of Juno Lucina. See Ov. Fast. III. 170; 251-8.

2. Acerra. Virg. Æn. V. 745; and Forbiger's note.

4. i.e. "The altar." Carm. I. XIX. 13.

5. Sermonis, "the literature," (including the antiquities and customs of Greece and Rome.) Cp. 'et linguas edidicisse duas,' Ov. A. A. II. 123; and, 'utrisque litteris,' Cic. Fin. I. IV. 10.

7. Libero caprum. Cf. Virg. Geor. II. 380,—'Baccho caper omnibus aris Cæditur.'

10. Adstrictum pice.....fumum bibere. See Smith's Dict. of Antiq. art. 'Vinum,' or Becker's Gallus, pp. 376-7. Cp. Theocr. VII. 147.

11. Fumum. Ov. F. V. 518,—'Promit fumoso condita vina cado.'

12. Lucius Volcatius Tullus, Cos. B.C. 66.

13. Cyathos. See below, Carm. III. XIX. 10; and Sat. I. VI. 117. These were cups, or rather deep ladles, for measuring the wine, and for pouring it from the bowl into the (pocula) glasses or drinking-cups. In Roman measure 12 cyathi made a sextarius.

6 sext. „ a congius.
4 congii „ an urna.
2 urnæ „ an amphora, (almost 6 gallons.)

Cyathos amici, i.e. in honorem amici.

14. Sospitis, i. e. having escaped the danger mentioned v. 8.

ib. Centum. Cp. Ov. Fast. III. 531,—

'Annosque precantur
'Quot sumant cyathos, ad numerumque bibunt.'

17. Super Urbe. Mœcenas was invested with the supreme civil authority in Rome and Italy. Tac. Ann. VI. 11. (See the nature of his authority discussed and explained in the Dict. Biogr. art. 'Mœcenas.')

18. Cotisonis, king of the Daci, to whom Augustus is said to have betrothed his daughter Julia.

26. Privatus, i.e. 'cum sis privatus.' Cp. Velleius, II. 88,—'Mœcenas non minus 'Agrippa Cæsari carus, sed minus honoratus, quippe vixit angusti clavi fine 'contentus;' i.e. though in fact a viceroy, he held no regular or recognised magistracy. [O.] Why may it not mean simply "like a private person," "laying aside the statesman for a time?"—'Ita lætitiæ vaca, ut si privatus 'esses.' [D.]

CARM. IX.—CARMEN AMŒBÆUM.

2. Potior. Cp. Plaut. Cas. I. 24,—

'Tune illam ducas? hercle, me suspendio;
'Quam tu ejus potior fias, satiust mortuum.'

6. Lydia. The name occurs in the First Book, Odes. VIII, XIII, XXV. If a real person, the distinctive epithet given to Ilia shows that she was not a Roman.

8. Romana...Ilia. So Ov. Fast. III. 9,—'Romana sacerdos,' instead of Albana or Latina.

9. Thressa. Compare the feminine forms, Magnessa, Cressa, Phœnissa.

13. Torret face mutua. Cp. Soph. Fragm. Œnom. 421,— τοίαν Πέλοψ ἵνγγα θηρατηρίαν ἔρωτος ἀστραπήν τιν' ὀμμάτων ἔχει, ἐνθάλπεται μὲν αὐτός ἐξοπτᾷ δ' ἐμέ.

14. Thurini. Thurium was in Lucania, not far from the ancient site of Sybaris.

15. Eur. Or. 1116,—δὶς θανεῖν οὐχ ἅζομαι.

20. Patet janua: Tibull I. II. 9.

21. Sidere pulchrior.

'Fair as a star, when only one
'Is shining in the sky.' Wordsworth.

ἀλίγκιον ἀστέρι καλῷ. Hom. Il. ζ. 401.

CARM. X.—AD LYCEN.

1. i.e. "If you were a Scythian."

2. Asperas.....fores. So Ov. Am. II. XIX. 21,—

'Et sine me, ante tuos projectum in limine postes,
'Longa pruinosa frigora nocte pati.'

Bentl. conjectures projectum here.

4. Plorares. Plaut. Aul. II. IV. 29,—'Aquam hercle plorat cum lavat profundere.'

7. Ventis. Bentl. conjectures sentis, to avoid the zeugma, by which glaciet, as well as remugiat, depends upon audis.

7. Ut glaciet, i. e. "you see how the clear sky is freezing the lying snow." [M.] quotes Soph. Fragm. Achill. 162,—πάγυν φανέντος αἰθρίου.

8. Numine. Inasmuch as 'Jupiter' is used for 'Æther,' numen is drawn into the same metaphor, and becomes a descriptive term.

9. Cp. Eur. Hippol. 6; Tibull. I. VIII. 69.

10. i.e. "Lest all should be suddenly reversed." The metaphor is from a rope bursting back, when at full tension on a turning wheel.
Orelli cites Aristid. Panath. p. 118,— πάντα ὥσπερ κάλου ῥαγέντος ἐχώρησεν ὀπίσω.
(κάλου is for κάλω. Arist. was a rhetor of the 2nd cent. A.D.)

14. Tinctus viola pallor. Cp. Virgil's epithet, 'pallentes violas,' Ecl. II. 47. Ovid has another comparison for paleness, Met. IV. 134,—'Oraque buxo Pallidiora gerens,' (sc. Thisbe.) Cp. ὁμοῖος θάψῳ ("a dye.") Theocr. Id. II. 88.

15. Pieria, "Pierian," i.e. Macedonian. The northern Pierians introduced and spread the worship of the Muses in Greece, and accordingly this adjective became their descriptive epithet; but in this place it has its first and proper sense as a geographical term.

17. Parcas. This is usually taken as an entreaty, and Orelli explains it thus,—'Quanquam humani nihil te flectit, tamen veluti dea misereˊre,' not quite satisfactorily. Mr. Shilleto, I understand, proposes to make it a dependent verb,—'curvat ut parcas,' i. e. "induces you to listen to me;" which makes better sense, if it were preceded by quando instead of quamvis.

18. Cp. Ov. Ep. X. 1,—'Mitius inveni quam te genus omne ferarum.'

CARM. XI.—AD MERCURIUM.

3. Sappho, Fragm. 70,—ἄγε δῖα χελύνη λέγε, φωνᾶσσα δὲ γίνεο.

6. Cp. Ars Poet. 404; Hom. Odyss. ρ. 271.

9. Cp. Anacr. Fragm. 75,— πῶλε Θρηκίη τί δή με λοξὸν ὄμμασιν βλέπουσα νηλεῶς φεύγεις;...
νῦν δὲ λειμῶνάς τε βόσκεαι
κοῦφά τε σκιρτῶσα παίζεις.
So Eur. Bacch. 167,— ἡδομένα δ' ἄρα
πῶλος ὅπως ἅμα ματέρι φορβάδι κῶλον ἄγει ταχύπουν σκιρτήμασι βάκχα.
And v. 866,—ὡς νεβρὸς χλοεραῖς
ἐμπαίζουσα λείμακος ἡδοναῖς.
Comp. Shakesp. Merchant of Venice, Act V. Sc. I:
'Do but note a wild and wanton herd
'Or race of youthful and unhandled colts,
'Fetching mad bounds, &c.'
.....'Therefore the poets
'Did feign that Orpheus drew trees, stones, and floods.'

17. This stanza has been condemned as spurious by many great critics, yet it is necessary as an explanation of the indefinite term 'Janitor aulæ.' (Consult Orelli's Excursus in defence of it.)

18. Ejus is a word rare in poetry, but it does not follow that it is spurious. Exeatque is Bentley's conjecture, and has had favourers; but a little consideration will show that the passages adduced in support of it (e.g. Ov. Trist. IV. III. 41; V. VI. 20, etc.) make against it. The phrase was common enough, but only in the sense of "expiring," not of "breathing."

21. Quin et=quinetiam, as in C. I. x. 13; II. XIII. 37. Compare the position of et in C. I. XII. 25; and so Virg. Æn. VI. 735.

23. Danai puellas Cp. Ov. Ep. XIV, 'Hypermnestra Lynceo.' Æsch. P. V. 853—869.

26. Inane.....dolium. Shakesp. Cymb. Act I. Sc. VII,—

'That tub both filled and running.'

See Lucian, Timon, 17. 'In pertusum ingerimus.....dolium' is a proverb in Plautus, Pseud. I. III. 135. So Lucret. III. 936.

27. Pereuntis. In Lucret. III. 940, the verse

'Sin ea, quæ fructus cumque es, periere profusa' may be said to indicate both the first and second senses of this verb. So in Ter. Ad. 134,—'Profundat, perdat, pereat.' Quære—Is 'percundi,' Livy, Præf. L. 1, ('pereundi perdendique omnia') transitive or intransitive.

29. Cp. Eur. Hipp. 1416. 33. Cp. Pind. Nem. x. 6.

35. Splendide mendax. Similar instances of this figure (oxymoron) are quoted from Cic. Mil. 27; Tac. Hist. IV. 50; Æsch. Frag. Inc. 273, ἀπάτῃ δικαία; Soph. Antig. 74, ὅσια πανουργήσασα. Ov. Ep. XII. 129,—'Pietate nocentes.' Ov. Met. VIII. 477,—'Impietate pia est.' Ib. III. 5, and VI. 474.

Compare also, in general sentiment, Soph. Phil. 108,— οὐκ αἰσχρὸν ἡγεῖ δῆτα τὰ ψευδῆ λέγειν;

οὐκ· εἰ τὸ σωθῆναι γε τὸ ψεῦδος φέρει.

49. i.e. "Fly how and whither you can." Cp. the Greek phrase ἃ πόδες ἄγον, Theocr. XIII. 70, and XIV. 42; and in Scripture (1 Sam. XXIII. 13), "went whithersoever they could go."

51. Sepulcro. Whose? his own, or Hypermnestra's? In the first sense, scalpe might be=scalpendam cura. But it is easier to understand sepulcro of a memorial tablet, or a cenotaph; as in Ov. Met. XI. 429,—'Sæpe in tumulis sine corpore nomina legi.' (See Virg. Æn. III. 304, and Forbiger's note.) Ovid has perhaps misled the commentators here, but he suggests (what Horace does not)

'Vel dede neci, defunctaque vita
'Corpora furtivis insuper adde rogis.'

Of course he may then properly add 'Scriptaque sint titulo nostra sepulcra brevi.' Heroid. XIV. 125—8.

CARM. XII.—AD NEOBULEN.

The arrangement of this Ode is due to Kirchner, and given in Orelli, Excurs. It is probable in itself, uniform with the rest of the Horatian metres, and consistent with the recognised rule of its own metre, viz. scansion in periods of 10 feet.

2. Dare ludum, i.e. to indulge their passion, to give it full play or scope. [O.] cites ψυχὴν διδόντες ἡδονῇ, Æsch. Pers. 841; and Cic. pro Cæl. 12; Plaut. Bacch. IV. X. 9. Some (but not so well) take the phrase to mean, "to be the sport of Love;" as in III. XXVII. 69,—'lusit;' and ἅμαχος ἐμπαίζει θεὸς Ἀφροδίτα, Soph. Antig. 800.

4. Patruæ. See Jahn on Pers. I. 11.

ib. Verbera linguæ. Cp. Æsch. Eum. 156,— ὄνειδος.....

ἔτυψεν δίκαν διφρηλάτου μεσολαβεῖ κέντρῳ.

And v. 135,—ἀντίκεντρα.

5. Tibi. Neobule is thought to be addressing herself, according to the fragment of Alcæus (Fr. 58.) imitated,—ἐμὲ δειλὰν, ἐμὲ παισᾶν κακοτάτων πεδέχοισαν.

ib. Qualum, "your wool-basket."

8. Liparæi, "of Lipara," near Sicily. 11. Cp. Theocr. Id. II. 124,— καὶ γὰρ ἐλαφρὸς καὶ καλός...

11. Bellerophonte. 'Ult. syll. producitur a forma Βελλεροφόντης,' Orell. Cp. Carm. IV. XI. 28.

11, 12. Segni may be taken with both pugno and pede. The ablative probably signifies the cause, "by reason of slow fist or foot," i.e. inferiority in boxing or racing.

15. Alto...fruticeto. βαθείης ἐκ ξυλόχοιο, Hom. Il. λ. 415. See Bentley's note, illustrating both alto and his own reading arto.

16. Excipere. Gr. -δέχεσθαι, as in Hom. Il. ε. 238, "to receive" on the point of the spear.

CARM. XIII.—AD FONTEM.

1. Fons Bandusiæ. The true site of this appears to have been six miles from Venusia. It is conjectured that Horace transferred the name, 'for auld langsyne,' (cp. Virg. Æn. III. 349) to the springs on his Sabine farm. (Was Bandusia the name of the place, or of the presiding nymph of the fountain?)

2. Digne mero, i. e. "worthy of an offering of wine," etc. Such offerings as these were made to the fontes, and their festival (Fontanalia) was celebrated on the 13th October. Cp. 'Fonti rex Numa mactat ovem,' Ov. Fast. III. 300; and the mention of a fontis delubrum in Cic. N. D. III. 37. Sacrifices to rivers are mentioned in Homer, Il. φ. 131; ψ. 147; and Herod. VII. 113: where observe a contrast between Horace's inficiet tibi rivos, and the Persian's care not to stain the stream with blood.

5. Prælia destinat, "marks out as natural to his age." 'Vitulus inermi fronte prurit in pugnam.' Mart. III. LVIII. 11.

15. Loquaces. Cp. 'Garrulus...rivus,' Ov. Fast. II. 316; and Theocr. VII. 137.

16. Lymphæ. 'Cave construas lymphæ loquaces tuæ, quod prosam orationem sapit, et in hac structura Poeta dixisset tibi non tuæ.' [Bent.]

CARM. XIV.—AD ROMANOS.

1. The sense is as follows,—"Augustus, who appeared to us at Rome to have "gone on a fatally dangerous expédition, to have sought, like another "Hercules, glory at the risk of life, now is returning home." This was in B.C. 24. Augustus had been ill, and reports of his death had spread; and some interpret the phrase here used as referring to them. I have followed Orelli.

2. Morte venalem. Cp. Virg. Æn. IX. 206,—'Qui vita bene credat emi quo tendis honorem.' Ib. XII. 49,—'Letumque sinas pro laude pacisci.'

5. Unico gaudens, i. e. "whose love is given to him alone." Some have construed unico "excellent;" as in Catull. XXIX. 11,—'Imperator unice;' but this leaves no distinctive sense for clari ducis, v. 7.

5. Mulier, Livia Drusilla, wife of Augustus; the Augusta Julia of Ovid, Fast. I. 536.

6. Operata sacris, "let her come forth and offer her thank-offerings." Divis is a various reading; operor might be construed equally well with it. Sacris is the abl. c.; divis would be dative.

7. Soror, Octavia, mother of the Marcellus of Virgil, Æn. VI. 883.

8. Supplice vitta. Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 637; VII. 237. 'Pontificium harum vocum nomen supplicia servavit,' Sallust, Jug. XLVI. [O.]

11. Malo ominatis is a quasi-compound; it may be compared with suave olens in Catull. XIX. 13,

18. Marsi. The Social or Marsic War of 90—88 B.C.—'Cum timuit socias anxia Roma manus.' Ov. Am. III. XV. 10.

19. Spartacum, the head of the Servile War, 73—71 B.C. 'The most terrible 'guerilla chieftain recorded in history, unstained by the vices of his conquerors.' W. B. Donne, in Biogr. Dict.

23. Janitorem, "the porter." "If he will not admit you, or keeps you waiting, "come back."

27. Cp. Ov. Met. XV. 209,—

'Posito fervore juventæ
'Maturus mitisque.'

28. L. Munatius Plancus, Cos. 42 B.C.

CARM. XV.—AD CHLORIN.

There is a free paraphrase of this Ode by Parnell.

3. Laboribus, i.e. amoribus.

4. Maturo..funeri, "death that comes at a ripe or full age."

7. "Though such gaiety becomes Pholoë, it does not therefore become you."

13. "Home and household occupations suit your age" (decent te vetulam). Cp. Hom. Il. ζ. 490,— τὰ σαυτῆς ἔργα κόμιζε, ἱστόν τ' ἠλακάτην τε.

14. Luceriam, in Apulia.

16. Fœce tenus. Theocr. VII. 70,—κυλίκεσσι καὶ ἐς τρύγα χεῖλος ἐρειδων.

CARM. XVI.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Soph. Antig. 946,— ἔτλα καὶ Δανάας ὀβρίμιον φῶς ἄλλαξαι δέμας ἐν χαλκοδέτοις αὐλαῖς.

'The story of Zeus descending as golden rain into the prison of Danae, was 'meant for the bright sky delivering the earth from the bonds of winter, and 'awakening in her a new life, by the golden showers of spring.'—Max Müller, Lect. X. 2nd series.

2. Robustæ, "oaken." Cp. Ov. Met. V. 120—125; and Virg. Æn. II. 481,—'firma robora,' (mentioned, it may be observed, in connection with postes ærates.)

ib. Vigilum. Cp. Lucr. V. 862,—'Levisomna canum fido cum pectore corda.'

3. Tristes. Cp. Hom. Il. κ. 183,—κύνες.....δυσωρήσονται.

12. Argivi, Amphiaraus, betrayed by Eriphyle to the Theban War. Cp. Ov. Nux, 110,—

'Præda nefandæ
'Conjugis Aonium misit in arma virum.'
'Fundus fabulæ. Hom. Od. λ. 326.' [O.]

14. Vir Macedo, Philip. 'Callidus emptor Olynthi,' Juv. XII. 47. Plutarch says, in his life of P. Æmilius, 'It was a common saying, that it was not Philip, but Philip's gold that took the cities.' Compare the saying of Philip, quoted in Cic. ad Att. I. 16.

15. Navium.....duces. This is generally understood to be an allusion to the deserter Menas.

17. Cp. Juv. XIV. 139,—'Crescit amor nummi quantum ipsa pecunia crescit.'

18. Majorum fames. Theocr. XVI. 65,—πλεόνων ἵμερος.

19. Late conspicuum. Cp. 'late spectabilis,' Ov. Ep. IX. 127.

23. Castra. An image already used by Cicero, ad Fam. IX. 20, where see also Grævius' citation of Seneca, Ep. 2,—'Soleo enim et in alia castra transire, non tamquam transfuga.'

25. Compare Burns (in his Vision),—

'Then never murmur or repine;
'Strive in thy humble sphere to shine,
'And, trust me, not Potosi's mine,
'Nor king's regard,
'Can give a bliss o'ermantling thine,—
'A rustic Bard.'

28. Cp. the Gk. epigram of Palladas,—ὦ τοῖς κληρονόμοις πλούσιε, σοὶ δὲ πένης.

29. Virg. Geor. II. 467, sq.

31. Cic. Att. VII. 11,—'Unam mehercule tecum apricationem in illo Lucretino tuo sole malim, quàm omnia istiusmodi regna.'

34. Læstrygonia. Formiæ was popularly identified with the city of Homer's Læstrygones, whose King Lamus, mentioned in the next Ode, was son of Poseidon. Odyss. κ. 82,— ἐβδομάτῃ δ' ἱκόμεσθα Λάμου αἰπὺ πτολίεθρον τηλέπυλον Λαιστρυγονίην.

See Cic. Att. II. 13. Formiæ is satirically called Mamurrarum urbe in Sat. I. v. 37.

35. Cp. 'Gallicæ oves pretiosiores habentur, earumque præcipue Altinates' (= near Venice), Colum. VII. II. 3; and Mart. XIV. CLV.

'Velleribus primis Apulia, Parma secundis
'Nobilis, Altinum tertia laudat ovis.'

ib. Gallicis, "in Cisalpine Gaul."

39. Contracto. 'Each wish contracting.' Goldsmith's Traveller.

40. Cic. Parad. VI. 3,—'Quam magnum vectigal sit parsimonia.'

41. Alyattei. With the form of this genitive, compare Achilleï, Ulixeï, Epod. XVII. 14, 16; C. I. XV. 34. Regnum Alyattei, Lydia.

43. Bene est. So Ep. I. I. 89; Sat. II. II. 120.

CARM. XVII.—AD ÆLIUM LAMIAM.

Lucius Ælius Lamia. 'Meo Lamiæ,' Carm. I. XXVI. 8. Their nobility is made proverbial in Juvenal, IV. 154; VI. 385.

1. Lamus, the reputed ancestor of the family. See above Carm. v. 34.

5. Ducis. This is the reading authorised by MSS. Ducit is a correction very generally adopted, but not necessary, although plausible.

7. Maricæ, a nymph worshipped at Minturnæ, identified by some with Circe; the mother of Latinus, according to Virg. Æn. VII. 47.

9. Late tyrannus. εὐρυκρείων.

10. Alga...inutili. Cp. the proverbial phrases in Sat. II. v. 8; Virg. Ecl. VII. 42; also the description, Hom. Il. I. 7.

12. Aquæ...augur. So below, Carm. III. XXVII. 10; and cp. Virg. Georg. I. 388,—'Cornix plena pluviam vocat improba voce;' and Lucret. V. 1084.

13. Annosa. Cp. Hes. Fr. 106,— ἐννέα τοι ζώει γενεὰς λακέρυζα κορώνη ἀνδρῶν ἡβώντων·

Add Ovid, Am. II. VI. 36,—'Cornix.....
'Illa quidem sæclis vix moritura novem.'

14. Compone. Not, perhaps, quite the same as 'super foco repone' in C. I. IX; but "collect for to-morrow's use."

ib. Genium...curabis. See Art. 'Genius' in Biogr. Dict. The phrase may be compared with Persius V. 151,—'Indulge Genio, carpamus dulcia;' and with its opposite in Plaut. Tric. I. II. 81,—'Qui cum Geniis suis belligerant parcipromi.'

16. Operum solutis, "released from work," as on a holiday. On the subject of holiday exemptions for slaves, Cp. Cic. Legg. II. 29; Tibull. II. I. 5. [O.]

CARM. XVIII.—AD FAUNUM.

4. Alumnis, "the nurslings of the flock."

6. Veneris sodali. The cup is so called in accordance with the old verse, which joins Venus with Bacchus,—'Sine Cerere et Baccho friget Venus'; a proverb quoted in Ter. Eun. IV. v. 6; and Cic. Nat. D. II. 44; and generally expressed in Eur. Bacch. 773,—οἶνου δὲ μήκετ' ὄντος οὐκ ἔστιν Κύπρις.

11. Festus, rarely used of persons; but so 'festam plebem,' Tac. Ann. II. 69.

15. Cp. Lucret. V. 140,—

'Membra moventes
'Duriter et duro terram pede pellere matrem.'

16. Ter pede. 'Quod est tripudiare,' Sch. Tripudium, i.e. "a measured and religious dance," derived by Cicero (Div. II. 34) from terripudium, is perhaps more correctly deduced, with its kindred verb tripudio, from this phrase ter pede. Observe that an old collateral form of the verb is tripodo.

CARM. XIX.—AD TELEPHUM.

1. Quantum distet, i.e. in point of time. The meaning is,—"You are absorbed in "questions of ancient history and chronology, when you should be joining in "our arrangements for a party."

3. Æaci, father of Peleus and Telamon, king of Ægina (see the legend of its people, the Myrmidones, in Ov. Met. VII. 622—657), afterwards a judge in Hades. See Carm. II. XIII. 22.

4. Sacro. The Homeric epithet Ἴλιος ἱρή.

6. Aquam temperet, i.e. for the bath. Cic. Fam. IX. XVI. 9.

7. Quota, "at what hour?"

9. Lunæ, genitive case. So in Greek, Call. Ep. XXX. 1,—ἔγχει καὶ πάλιν εἰπὲ Διοκλέος. Compare above, C. III. VIII. 3.

10. Auguris Murenæ. Carm. II. X. is addressed to Murena, probably the same. This feast may be supposed to celebrate his election into the College of Augurs.

11. Tribus aut novem. Cyathus is used to express one-twelfth of the unit sextarius (as uncia of the as); therefore the proportion here proposed is equivalent to one-fourth, or three-fourths wine to three-fourths or one-fourth water.

ib. Commodis, "fully filled." So Bent. and Orelli. Gesner seems to explain it as "suited to each taste."

14. Attonitus, "in a fine frenzy." Cp. insanire, v. 18.

15. Tris.....supra, i.e. "more than three," according to the choice given in v. 11. But [O.] understands it as tres supra novem, i.e. 'duodecim, vel, quod idem est, merum nulla prorsus aqua dilutum,' i.e. "the poet will choose the nine cyathi, but not exceed them." This seems forced, and unsuited to the preceding context.

19. Cp. Eurip Bacch. 128,—Φρυγίων αὐλῶν πνεύματι; and the connection of αὐλῶν συρίγγων τε, in Eurip. Troad. 126.

20. Pendet, i. e. "hangs up untouched." πασσάλοφι κρέμασε, Hom. Od. θ. 67.

26. Simílem.....Vespero. Diomed is compared to Sirius, in Hom. Il. ε. 5; Pallas to Lucifer, in Virg. Æn. VIII. 589; Jason to Sirius, in Apoll. Rhod. III. 936,— ἅτε Σείριος ὠκεάνοιο

ὃς δή τοι καλὸς μὲν ἀρίζηλός τ' ἐσιδέσθαι ἀντέλλει μήλοισι δ' ἐν ἄσπετον ἤκεν ὀιζύν.

CARM. XX.—AD PYRRHUM.

2. Leænæ, i.e. the beauty who claims Nearchus as her lover. (For a serious grande certamen of the kind, Cp. Soph. Trach. 503, sqq.)

8. Major an illi. Orelli adopts the conjecture illa, taking major in the sense "victorious." The common reading seems genuine,—"Whether the lion's share (i.e. victory) falls to you or her." Illi is authorised by all MSS. The two oldest Harl. MSS. add the gloss meretrici, thus excluding the idea of an erratum.

11. Arbiter. Nearchus is the umpire as well as the prize of the contest. But cp. μόχθων βραβεύς, in Eur. Hel. 703.

14. 'Odoratis humeros perfusa capillis Mæonis,' Ov. Fast. II. 309. Cp. Theocr. V. 91.

15. Nireus. Hom. Il. β. 673.

ib. Aquosus. The Homeric πολυπίδαξ.

16. Raptus, i. e. Ganymede. Cp. Hom. Il. υ. 234.

CARM. XXI.—AD AMPHORAM.

1. Manlio, Lucius Manl. Torquatus, Cons. B.C. 65. See Chronolog. Table.

4. Pia, "gentle, kindly." It would be impia, if producing querellas, rixas, &c.

5. Quocunque lectum nomine, "gathered" (a term more proper for the grapes; here therefore="stored up") "to whatever end." Cp. eo nomine, "on that account;" suo nomine, "on his own account," i.e. personally. Cæsar, B. G. I. 18.

6. Bono die. Ov. Fast. I. 72.

7. Descende. The apotheca, where the amphoræ were kept, was in the upper story of the house.

ib. Corvino, Marcus Valerius Messalla Corvinus,—'diserti Messallæ,' Ars Poet. 371.

9. Madet. A convivial metaphor, applied to philosophic studies, borrowed from Horace by Martial, I. XL. 3; VII. LXIX. 2.

ib. Socraticis...sermonibus. A phrase borrowed by Plin. Ep. III. XII. 1.

11. Prisci, i e. "the elder Cato." Some explain it as a synonym for severi, and suppose Cato Uticensis to be meant; to whom the allusion (if it were anything but a jest) would be more strictly applicable.

13. Lene tormentum, "a gentle force." γλυκεῖ' ἀνάγκα, Bacchylides, Fr. 27.

18. Cornua, the same, in metaphor, as vires. It is a frequent phrase in Scripture, and is found in Ovid, A. A. I. 239.

24. Fugat. Cp. Eur. Ion, 84,—ἄστρα δὲ φεύγει; and 1158,—ἕως διώκουσ' ἄστρα. So Virg. Æn. III. 521; Ov. Am. I. XIII. 28.

CARM. XXII.—AD DIANAM.

2. Gr. εἰλείθυια. The phrase is borrowed by Ov. Am. II. XIII. 18.

4. Triformis. Virg. Æn. IV. 511. i.e. worshipped as Luna, Diana, Hecate.

6. Per exactos...annos. So, 'pleno anno,' Carm. XVIII. 5. Cp. Carm. III. VIII. 9.

7. Obliquum. Ov. Ep. Phædra Hipp. 104,—'Obliquo dente timendus aper.' Hom. Il. μ. 148,—σύεσσιν.....δοχμώ τ' ἀΐσσοντε. Odyss. τ. 450,—Λικριφὶς ἀΐξας.

CARM. XXIII.—AD PHIDYLEN.

1. Supinas...manus. ὑπτιάσμασιν χερῶν, Æsch. P. V. 1026.

3. Horna, "the produce of the year."

4. Avida porca. Ov. Fast. I. 349. 7. Robiginem. Ov. Fast. IV. 911.

9. Nam quæ, etc. "You may sacrifice (thure et fruge): the costly victims fed upon Algidus, on the Alban pastures, are for the state (pontifices) to offer."

12. Victima; 18. hostia. Derived by Ovid from vinco, hostis. Fast. I. 335,— 'Victima, quæ dextra cecidit victrice, vocatur;

'Hostibus amotis hostia nomen habet.'

CARM. XXIV.

3. Cæmentis, "broken masses, rubble," from cædo. Cp. (both for meaning and phrase) Carm. III. I. 35.

4. Terrenum...publicum. This reading is due to Lachmann. He shows (on Lucr. I. 360) that the old Bland. MS. reads publicum, with the addition of late patens as a gloss. (I find it also in Hl. E.; and it is a variant in some MSS. for proximum in v. 47, a confusion probably arising out of its actual use here.)

Terrenum, a generic technical term for land, (and so used in Liv. XXIII. 19, 'herbici terreni,') is a conjectural correction, necessary, if publicum is read. Publicus was the legal phrase for things (naturali jure omnium communia) free and common to all, and "of no private right;" and would, therefore, be fitly antithetical to occupes, "you seize or invade aggressively, usurpingly." While there are these positive arguments in favour of Lachmann's reading, there are the following objections to the old line: The order of words is awkward, so is the addition of the adj. omne (we might expect rather Tyrrhenumque). Further, though the two adjectives (Tyrrhenum et Apulicum), taken together in poetic hyperbole, stand for "the whole of the coast," it is obvious to remark that Apulia, whether coast or country, was never a favourite resort ('inanissima pars Italiæ,' Cic. ad Att. VIII. 3. Cp. H. Epod. III. 16; and Sat. I. v. 78). Nor again does this name ever occur for the superum mare. Again, the form Apulicus is never used, nor is there any instance of the A being shortened.

6. Summis verticibus, "on the topmost summits." The sense is,—"Vast as your "plans and works may be, there is a Destiny above all, from whose over-"whelming power you cannot be secure." [O.] says,—'Explica de verticibus, 'fastigiis, ἀετώμασιν ædium....'Ανάγκη clavos...in ædium culmine figit domino 'velut acclamans Hucusque nec ultra.' Somewhat analogous is the description of impending retribution in Æschylus, of an avenger whose crushing weight or force no roof can resist: Suppl. 647,— πράκτορα...δν οὔ τις ἂν δόμος ἔχοι ἐπ' ὀρόφων μιαίνοντα, βαρὺς δ' ἐφίζει.

Some, however, connect the phrase with the subsequent rather than the previous context, interpreting it of "the heights of pride and prosperity" (as Jani interprets,) or of "the owner;" as if for vertice in the sense of capite, with the plural for the singular, perhaps as being more comprehensive, and also avoiding any tautology with caput in v. 8. The first-mentioned way seems the safest; but if the last were sufficiently approved, the whole sentence, with its peculiar metaphor (clavos), and its indefinite equivocal expression (verticibus), might take its place beside Shakespeare's allegory (Rich. II. Act III. Sc. II.) of Death, who, seated 'Within the hollow crown ...

'Comes at the last, and with a little pin
'Bores through his castle walls.'

22. Alterius viri. ἑπακτὸν ἄνδρα, Soph. Aj. 1296. ἑτέροις ἐπὶ λέκτροις, Eur. Med. 639.

24. Et peccare, etc. "the principle of looking on vice (peccare) as a thing to be rejected with abhorrence, or else (aut) recompensed by death." This is Gesner's interpretation, according to which vv. 21–24 form but one sentence and sentiment, and therefore est is not to be repeated; while e in emori may be understood as conveying an emphatic meaning of utter, instant death, as a privilege and relief under the shame of what is intolerable. If est mori is adopted, there must be a stop after castitas, and a break in the context; and the meaning will be "and sin is abhorred, or else the penalty is death;" i.e. the adulteress is put to death by her relatives. This is Orelli's method. The doubt about the reading and the variation in MSS. may have arisen from ē being often an abbreviation for est. Again, Sanadon believes that est is the interpolation of one who did not see that v. 24 might be referred back to the est in v. 21. And undoubtedly emori gives a more difficult, and perhaps poetical, construction, and therefore might invite alteration.
[O.] can hardly be said to determine the meaning of emori by his citations. In Cicero, emori seems to be a mere substitution for mori, on account of the metre: in Columella, emori is "to die away." The natural force of e in emorior would be either intensive, or denoting escape, (i.e. "to die outright, or to get away by death.") Compare Plaut. Aulul. IV. V. 1,—'Emortuom ego me mavelim leto malo.'

'Yet still he sighs, for hoards are wanting still.'

CARM. XXV.—AD BACCHUM.

For true lyrical spirit, this Ode is unrivalled. We may, perhaps, except the third of Book IV; but this is bolder and more passionate in character. Its structure is abrupt, consisting of short, rapid, nervous sentences; a thing to be considered, in determining the question disputed at v. 12. I have decided on retaining the punctuation of Gesner and the older editors, on poetic as well as grammatical grounds.

2. Quæ nemora. On the ellipse of 'in,' in the first member of the sentence, see Blomf. Call. H. in Ap. 8. Bentley quotes Virg. Æn. VI. 692.

3. Velox answers to rapis, v. 1: so again devio in v. 12.

6. Stellis inserere. "To insert Cæsar among the stars," is "to celebrate his reception among....." The poet represents himself as doing that, the doing of which he celebrates. Cp. Virg. Ecl. VI. 62,—'Circumdat—erigit;' and v. 46,—'solatur.' Also Ecl. IX. 20.

ib. Consilio, "the court, or chosen counsellors" of Jove. Concilio would have a wider sense. See Heyne on Virg. Geor. I. 25.

8. Non secus, etc. The sense is,—"I am entranced as the Evias is entranced, "gazing over the wild waters and heights of Hebrus and Rhodope." But it may be doubted whether in jugis expresses place (i.e. of the Bacchanal standing "on the heights") or object, so as to depend on stupet (as in Sat. I. VI. 17.) The former construction seems preferable, as the objects are mentioned in v. 10; and it seems confirmed by Ovid's imitation, Trist. IV. I. 41,—

'Utque suum Bacchis non sentit saucia vulnus,
'Dum stupet Edonis exululata jugis;
'Sic ubi mota calent viridi mea pectora thyrso,
'Altior humano spiritus ille malo est.'

12. Ut mihi, i.e. "how enrapturing is the scene!" Orelli has taken away the stop after Rhodopen, and makes ut dependent upon non secus. Yet the construction, if allowed, is absolutely ἅπαξ λεγόμενον; no authority whatever has been adduced for it, and the analogies supposed to authorize it are defective. For instance, the fact that ut as well as ac is found after perinde and pariter is not sufficient: these words coincide nearly in meaning with non secus; but they do not coincide in construction, for they cannot take quam after them; nor could non secus be substituted for pariter in such passages as Virg. Æn. I. 714; II. 729. The proper word to compare with secus is aliter. Again, Hor. Carm. I. XVI. 7–9 is quoted as æque ut, but the quotation is inexact, for ut follows sic in v. 8. On the other hand, non secus may stand by itself, with the answering clause or participle suppressed; for it does so C. II. III. 2.

13. Ripas. Bentley rivos. Gesner quotes Carm. IV. II. 31, as showing that the authentic reading is equivalent to it in meaning. Others have read rupes. Ripas is more expressive of the poet's wanderings.

CARM. XXVI.—AD VENEREM.

2. Militavi...bello, as in Ov. Am. I. IX. 1; and Ars Am. II. 233,—'militiæ species amor est.'

3. Nunc arma. According to the practice of a soldier (emeritus, i.e.) who had served his time. See Ov. Trist. IV. VIII. 22. Cp. the gladiator in E. I. I. 4.

5. Marinæ. 'Venus orta mari,' Ov. Ep. XV. 203. Cp. Ov. Fast. IV. 62. Walckenaer (lib. XII. § 17) affirms that, among all the appellations of Venus,—'Celui de 'Marine servait surtout à la caractériser comme déesse de la volupté.'

8. Foribus minaces. This epithet seems to suit vectes only: the introduction therefore of the word arcus is an instance of zeugma. Or, the mention of "doors" may imply that of door-keepers. Again, the bow is a weapon suited to Cupid's warriors. For the general idea, cp. Theocr. Id. II. 128.

9. O quæ. This Ode contains a sort of satire (as does the 11th Epode) on lovers' inconsistencies. He exemplifies his own description in Sat. II. III. 261,—'Hæret invisis foribus,' and Sat. II. VII. 91,—'Eripe turpi colla jugo; Liber, liber sum dic age; Non quis; urget enim,' etc.

10. Memphin carentem.....nive, i. e. "the glowing Memphis." The goddess is perhaps appealed to under these titles, as able to persuade by wealth, or to kindle by warmth.

CARM. XXVII.—AD GALATEAM.

1. Parræ. This name has been variously interpreted as "the jay," "the lapwing," "the woodpecker;" I believe it is "the owl."

'Parra est rendu en italien par parruzza, qui en Lombard-Vénetien est l'effraie. Voyez le Opere di Orazio de Fabrini, Venet. 1669, p. 226.' This is Walckenaer's note, vol. II. p. 67.* Vanderburg was the first to maintain this interpretation. His arguments are clear and probable, (they may be seen at

* I have omitted two words in it, which seem to involve a mistake. The note runs thus,—'Est l'orfraie ou l'effraie;' but the two birds ought not to be (as, I understand, they often are) confounded. The first is "the osprey," the latter "the owl." length in Bothe's edition.) He shows that not only in the Venetian dialect, but in the country language of the Campagna, parra has passed into the form parruzza, and signifies "the common or barn owl." Pliny mentions the parra (N. H. XVIII. 69) without describing it; and appears to use œnanthe (X. 45) as another name for it, which would probably indicate (see Lidd. and Scott in v. οἰνάνθη) its downy feathering. I find it asserted that parra, in the Linnæan classification, stands for "lapwing;" this is erroneous: tringa is "the lapwing," parra the "jacana" (a tropical and non-European bird) in many points of habit and description corresponding to the other, and belonging to the same order, viz. the Grallæ, or Stilt-birds, but of a distinct family.

1. Recinentis. Re may have here the sense of repetition. As an epithet, it makes against the identification of parra with picus, which some incline to.

2. Ducat, "accompany." 3. Rava, "gray."

6. Similis sagittæ, "shooting across like an arrow." Æschylus, Eum. 181, goes so far conversely as to use πτηνὸν ὄφιν for "an arrow." (In S.S. Genes. XLIX. 17, we read,—'An adder in the path, that biteth the horse heels.' And the Hebr. in the margin is "arrow-snake.")

7. Cui. Some take this interrogatively; some read cur, with the stop after auspex. Ego cui timebo...suscitabo, "I will for my friend invoke good omens from the east."

> 'And bid the chanting raven rise
> 'When Phœbus gilds his orient skies,
> 'Ere speeds the shower-boding crow
> 'To lakes..... Francis' Transl.

11. Oscinem, "giving augury by note," as the præpetes aves by flight: Ov. Fast. I. 448. In the battle of Valerius and the Gaul (Liv. VII. 26,) the raven is præpes.

12. Sòlis ab ortu. This is used not of the time of prayer, but of the position of the devotee, who would look to the East for a favourable omen. That was the propitious quarter, observed alike in offering prayer or in expecting auguries. See Virg. Æn. XII. 172,—'Ad surgentem conversi lumina solem.' Hence with Roman augurs, (who, in consulting the aspect of the heavens, turned their faces southward, and consequently had the East on their left) the signs on the left hand were lucky. So in Virg. Æn. II. 693,—'intonuit lævum.' Ovid, Trist. I. IX. 49,—'tonitrusve sinistri.' See Cicero upon this subject, de Div. II. 39. But this technicality became the cause of much confusion in Latin usage; since, owing perhaps to natural associations of ideas, but mainly, it is said, to imitation of the Greeks (who in taking omens looked northward, and so had the East to their right,) dexter came to be used in a good sense, (Virg. Æn. II. 388; VIII. 302) sinister in a bad one (V. Ecl. IX. 15;) so lævus here, in v. 15. See note in [D.] and Plaut. Aulul. IV. III. 1, coll. VI. 3, and Asin. II. I. 12.

13. Sis licet, i. e. licet per me, "I pray you may be."

15. Picus, "the green woodpecker." 'Pici (Fr. pivert) Martis cognomine (Comp. Ov. F. III. 37) insignes, et magni in auspiciis,' Plin. XVIII. 20.

17. Sed vides, "but see, a more real danger than omens."

18. Ego.....novi. This emphatic expression seems to convey the idea of "I know by experience." Cp. the probable allusions to a shipwreck in O. II. XVII. 20; and C. III. IV. 28.

21. Cp. Virg. Georg. III. 513.

ξείνην ναυτιλίην ἐφέπω.

35. Filiæ. Quære—Dative or genitive? It may be taken as the latter,—"the name of daughter which I have forfeited;" but it is better to construe it as a dative, and take nomen in apposition with Pater,—"a name abandoned by your daughter," i. e. "which I have lost the right to use." So Ov. Epist. X. 69 (quoted among other instances by Bentley,)—

'Nam pater, et tellus justo regnata parenti,
'Prodita sunt facto nomina cara meo.'

37. Levis una mors. Compare Eur. Heracl. 959,—χρὴν γὰρ οὐχ ἅπαξ θνήσκειν.

60. Lædere. Lædo is properly "to dash, or break," a sense seen in the compounds allido, illido, &c.

For the methods of suicide proposed, Cp. Ov. Ep. II. 133—142.

62. Procellæ, i. e. "the air." So, 'tenues ventos,' Ov. Ar. Am. II. 86.

69. Abstineto .....irarum. 'Homericum est λῆγε χόλοιο.' [G.]

73. Uxor...esse nescis, "you know not how to be (i. e. how to behave as) the wife of Jove." But it as well (especially in Horace, as an imitator of the Greek) to take it for te esse uxorem, "you know not that you are".....which is the construction in Epist. I. VII. 22; and Virgil's sensit delapsus, Æn. II. 377. The two constructions answer nearly to the Gr. οὐκ ἐπίστασαι εἶναι, and οὐκ ἐπίστασαι οὖσα.

74. Compare Eurip. Ion, 650,—παῦσαι λόγων τῶνδ', εὐτυχεῖν δ' ἐπίστασο. (The meaning may be disputed. Some refer εὐτυχεῖν to Creusa; in which case the likeness of the passages is merely verbal. I understand it, "Learn to acquiesce in your good fortune.")

75. Tua...nomina. See Herod. IV. 45. Sectus orbis, "the divided world," i. e. half the world. Sallust, Jug. XVII, speaks of the globe as divided into Europe and Asia. Orelli comp. Soph. Trach. 101,—διῃσμένοις ἀπείροις κλιθείς.

8. Bibuli Consulis. Bibulus was Consul B.C. 59, with Julius Cæsar, a consulate characterized by the epigram (Suet. J. C. 20),— 'Non Bibulo quicquam nuper sed Cæsare factum est;
'Nam Bibulo fieri consule nil memini.'
(A jest of the same kind was passed on his ædileship six years before, Ib. 10.)

16. Nox. Orelli refers to Pausan. I. XL. 6, for mention of a Νυκτὸς μαντεῖον at Megara; also to Carm. III. XIX. 10. 'Nox et Venus' are joined together in Carm. III. XI. 50. Cp. Carm. I. IV. 5; and Eur. Hippol. 106,—νυκτὶ θαυμαστός. (Class. Journ. XXI. p. 252.)

ib. Nenia. This word is said by Cicero to be of Greek origin,—'Honoratorum 'virorum laudes in contione memorent, easque etiam cantu, ad tibicinem pro-'sequatur, cui nomen neniæ, quo vocabulo etiam Græcis cantus lugubres 'nominantur.' De Legg. II. 24. It is conjectured by Pott to be akin to νηνέω; if correctly, we may infer that the proper radical notion of it was not "mourning," as is commonly represented, but "accumulation, or repetition." And this notion is common to all its meanings, however varied or disconnected they seem. For "repetition" forms the character and essence, whether of a eulogy (as in Cicero, l. c) or of a lament or dirge (as in Carm. II. XX. 21,) or of pathos in poetry (as in Carm. II. I. 38,) or of a soothing evening lullaby (as here, according to Orelli's explanation, 'cantilena...ad somnum invitante,') or of a proverbial saying or 'old song,' (as in E. I. I. 63.)

CARM. XXIX.—AD MÆCENATEM.

4. Balanus, the myrobalanus, an Arabian nut, yielding an ointment. 'Glans Latinis, βάλανος Græcis.' [D.] Persius has an adj. formed from it, 'balanatum gausape,' ("a well-oiled beard") S. IV. 37.

6. Æsula, between Prænestе and Tibur.

8. Telegoni juga, Tusculum, built by Telegonus, son of Ulysses and Circè. Cp. Ov. Fast. III. 92,—'Factaque Telegoni mœnia celsa manu.'

ib. Parricidæ. The cyclic legend related, that Telegonus, having set out in search of his father, was thrown upon the coast of Ithaca by storms, and, upon being attacked by Ulysses, slew him without knowing who he was. His spear is said to have been pointed with a fish-spine or prickle (a kind of weapon common at this day in the South Seas.)

10. Molem, Mæcenas' house, which was on the Esquiline: it was remarkable for a tower of unusual height; its commanding view is implied v. 7. Nero is said by Suetonius (c. 38) to have looked on the burning Rome 'e turri Mæcenatiana.'

15. Aulæis. Virg. Æn. I. 697. Ostro. Ib. 700,—

'Aurea composuit sponda.....
.....'stratoque super discumbitur ostro.'

16. Explicuere, "can smooth." Gr. ἐκτάνυσαι,—οὔτε παρειάων ἐκτανύσεις ῥυτίδας· Lucil. Epigr. in Anth. Cp. 'Exporge frontem, Ter. Ad. V. III. 53.

27. The sense of the stanza is—"You, at this period of relaxation, are unceasing in "your care for the public peace, and the foreign relations of the state. But "look not too forward; make sure of (quod adest) the present."

32. Quod adest...componere. Cratinus, Fr. ap. Suidam,—ἄνδρας σοφοὺς ἐχρῆν τὸ παρὸν πρᾶγμ' εἰς δύναμιν θέσθαι καλῶς.

33. Fluminis ritu, &c. See Gray, Progress of Poesy, st. 1, an imitation of this passage, applied to Music.

34. Medio alveo...delabentis. For alveo Orelli reads æquore. It is very difficult to decide which word has the best claim to be admitted into the text. The best MSS. are quoted for alveo; several have æquore, with alveo written over as a V. L.; others, alveo with æquore as a V. L. Orelli prefers æquore as the more difficult reading, involving a rarer usage, and therefore the less likely to have been accidentally introduced, and the more likely to have been explained; and he conceives alveo to be a gloss. To this it may be objected, that alveo is not a natural gloss for æquore; it is not synonymous with it. 'Alveus' is "the channel or bed of the river," not the river itself. I can find but one passage where alveus exchanges its proper sense of channel for that of stream, viz. in Q. Curt. V. III. 2,—clementiore alveo: though I allow that, in the one other passage where the word occurs in Horace, 'Tusco donatat alveo,' C. III. VII. 28, the two meanings are combined, and alveo becomes poetically a substitute for flumine or æquore. (We may even add Virg. G. I. 203.) But, considering the extreme rarity of this usage, it is as likely that æquore might be added as a gloss to alveo (however incorrectly) as the contrary. I say incorrectly, for I conclude that medio alveo here means simply "down the mid channel," and admits of no such poetic enallage as 'Tusco alveo' does. Another supposition is perhaps admissible, viz. that the poet himself hesitated between the two words (there are two instances of such curæ secundæ in Eurip. Medea, 300 and 1314), between æquore as the more poetical, and alveo as the more correct phrase. In Virg. Æn. VIII. 86 and 96, which Orelli quotes in support of his reading, the context supplies a special ground for the adoption of æquor, which would not apply here. 'Tiber is there represented as calming his swelling tide, for Æneas' sake, to the stillness of a lake,—'In morem stagni placidæque paludis Sterneret æquor aquis,' and the boat glides on 'placido æquore.' No other substantive would so fitly express the waveless level of the stream.

Æquor is doubtless a "surface or level," whether of land or water. So æquora ponti and campi. So æquore aperto (without the addition of campi), Virg. Æn. XII. 333; XI. 599; and aperta æquora, Geor. III. 195; Æn. VII. 738. So scindimus æquor, the "surface of arable land," Geor. I. 50. So æquor saxi, Lucr. III. 905; speculorum æquor ("a mirror,") Lucr. IV. 107. But neither by the predecessors nor by the imitators of Horace is the word used of a river. (I infer that it seemed to them to express properly breadth and expanse.) Bentley reads alveo, and quotes in support of it Q. Curt. V. IV. 8,—'Amnis presso in solum delabitur alveo,' (i.e. "glides down a deep indented channel"); and Ov. Am. II. XIII. 9,—'Nilus lato delapsus in alveo.' Medio alveo occurs in Ov. F. V. 637. Alveus is a word in constant use with Virgil, as Æn. VII. 33, 436; and Ovid, as Met. I. 343,—'Plenos capit alveus amnes.' Cp. Ib. VIII. 558; Am. III. VI. 86. Among later editors, Dillenburger adheres to the old reading; also Keller.

X. 11,—'Factumst illud: fieri infectum non potest.' We may observe here the difference of the secondary meaning in retro, and the Gr. ὀπίσω. ὀπίσω is used only of future time, not of past time.

48. Vexit. This is usually understood as=avexit. Mr. Conington compares Virg. G. I. 461, and translates thus,—"What once the flying hour has brought."

49. Fortuna, etc. "Such a man (potens sui) is superior to and undismayed by Fortune."

59. Votis pacisci, "to make a bargain in prayer with the gods." Cp. 'prece poscis emaci,' Pers. Sat. II. 3.

62. Biremis præsidio scaphæ. Biremis is here used, not of a bireme (i.e. "a ship with two banks of oars"), but of a two-oared boat, in which, if the ship is wrecked, the passenger may escape. The sense is—"Even in the wreck of my fortunes I shall be unhurt."

CARM. XXX.

1. Exegi. Cp. the finish of Ovid's Metam, XV. 871,—

10. Dicar, qua violens...deduxisse, i.e. it will be the boast of my countrymen (the Apulians), that I first adapted the poetry of Æolia (see Carm. I. I. 34) to Italian measures. Not that Apulia would be the chief scene of Horace's glory, but that he would be the first of that race or country so distinguished. 'Ibi natus qua Aufidus obstrepit' [O.]; or the clause (v. 10.) might even depend on ex humili potens, "raised to eminence from that rude or narrow vale——?" Bentley would understand potens of Daunus, who obtained the kingdom 'ex homine privato princeps, ex exule tyrannus.' But a description of Daunus is inappropriate in a mere reference to the country; nor, in such Odes as this, should the separate clauses be allowed to diverge needlessly from the main subject. Potens is an epithet of poets, in C. IV. VIII. 26.

11. Daunus, the ancient legendary king of Apulia.

16. Volens. 'Ex formula publica volens propitius,' Gesn. (as in Liv. VII. 26.)

Q. HORATI FLACCI CARMINA.

LIBER QUARTUS.

CARM. I.—AD VENEREM.

Suetonius (in Vita Horatii) asserts that the composition of this Fourth Book of Odes was due to the request of Augustus, who desired a poetic celebration of the triumphant career of the young Neros. Odes IV. and XIV. (each, it may be observed, followed by one in praise of Augustus himself) form the answer to the request, and the nucleus of the whole book.

3 Bonæ. Explained by Orelli from Tibull. II. IV. 45,—'Bona quæ nec avara'...

4. Cinaræ, a real person apparently, mentioned again Carm. IV. XIII. 21.

6. Circa lustra decem, "at 50 years old." Carm. II. IV. 24.

8. Revocant=alio vocant.

9. Tempestivius. Cp. 'rectius,' Carm. III. XV. 8.

10. Paulli...Maximi. Paul. Fabius Max. was consul B. C. 11. It is conjectured that this was his son, and the same to whom many of Ovid's Epistles ex Ponto are addressed.

ib. Purpureis ales oloribus, "borne on your swan-drawn car." Cp. Carm. III. XXVIII. 15. For the meaning of purpureus, see Conington's note on Æn. VI. 641, where lumine purpureo appears to express λευκὴ αἴγλη.

12. Jecur. Gr. ἦπαρ, used synonymously for the heart, but especially when violences of passion, jealousies, and the like are intended. So in C. 1. XIII. 4; I. XXV. 15; Sat. I. IX. 56. So in Juv. I. 45. On the other hand, it may be conjectured that the description of Ἔρως δραπέτης in Moschus, ἐπὶ σπλάγχνοισι κάθηται, refers to his power over the softer feelings, according to our saying, that 'Pity is akin to love.' In Æsch. Eum. 859, σπλάγχνων νέων means "young hearts;" and so, "tender, untouched as yet by fierce and evil passions."

15. Centum puer artium, i.e. most accomplished. Orelli cp. Cic. pro Rosc. Am. 41,—'omnium artium pueruloś;' and Catul. XII. 9.

17. Quandoque, for quandocumque; as below, Carm. II. 34. The sense is,—"When "you have gained him success against his wealthy rival, he will raise you a "statue and shrine."

20 Ponet marmoream. Cp. 'marmoreum fecimus,' Virg. Ecl. VII. 35.

ib. Citrea, "of citrus wood." The citrus was a scented wood, highly valued at Rome, used for costly furniture, tables, etc. Gr. θύα, or θύον (Odyss. ε. 60, where it is one of the odorous woods burnt in Calypso's grotto). ("Thyine wood" is mentioned in the N. T., Revelation, XVIII. 12.) It is sometimes confounded with the citron (malus medica), and with the cedar.

30. Credula. So Milton, P. Reg. II. 166,—'Draw out with credulous desire.'

35. Decoro. The last syllable is elided, as in C. III. XXIX. 35. It has been noticed that in this and the 3rd Ode of this book there is a συνάφεια, not observed in, the earlier books; and that the last syllable of the short lines is not common but long. This theory makes the elision more natural. Lachmann (on Lucr. IV. 98) lays it down as a rule, 'in quarto Carminum libro vocales longas non elidi.'

36. Inter verba cadit. Virg. Æn. IV. 76. Sappho, Hymn II. ver. 9,—καμμὲν γλῶσσα ἔαγε.

CARM. II.—AD IULUM ANTONIUM.

Iulus Antonius, son of the Triumvir and Fulvia, favoured and distinguished by Augustus; but put to death by him, B. C. 3. See Merivale, Rom. Hist. vol. IV. ch. XXXVII.

Iulus, himself an author, is supposed to have called on Horace for a Pindaric Ode in praise of Augustus. The poet excuses himself (as in C. I. VI.); but after characterising the poetry of Pindar, covertly passes on to sketch the eulogy desired.

1. Pindarum quisquis, "to emulate Pindar is to attempt to fly like Icarus, a "difficult and dangerous flight."

3. Nititur. Ov. Pont. II. VII. 27,—'Aves motis nitantur aera pennis.'

5. Velut amnis. This metaphor is in Pindar himself, Ol. XI. 9; and is fully drawn out by Gray, as referred to on C. III. XXIX. 33.

ib. Imbres, etc. Hom. Il. λ. 492,— πλήθων πόταμος πεδίονδε κάτεισι χειμάῤῥους κατ' ὄρεσφιν, ὀπαζόμενος Διὸς ὄμβρῳ.

7. Quintil. X. I. 61,—'Novem Lyricorum longe Pindarus princeps, spiritus 'magnificentia, sententiis, figuris, beatissima rerum verborumque copia, et 'velut quodam Eloquentiæ flumine; propter quæ Horatius eum merito credidit 'nemini imitabilem.'

ib. Profundo...ore. A phrase used with propriety both of a river (as in the metaphor) and of poets, as in Ars Poet. 323; Ov. A. Am. I. 206.

10. Dithyrambos. The dithyramb was properly the old Bacchic song.

Διωνύσου ἄνακτος καλὸν ἐξάρξαι μέλος οἶδα διθύραμβον. Archil. Frag. 72.

Pind. Ol. XIII. 18,—βοηλάτᾳ.....διθυράμβῳ.

12. Lege solutis, "irregular, rhythmical rather than metrical." In Ov. Trist. IV. X. 24,—'verba soluta modis' means "prose-writing." Cicero describes the 'oratio philosophorum' as 'nec vincta numeris, sed soluta liberius.' Orat. 60.

13. Seu deos, etc. Allusion is here made to the different classes of Pindar's poems. The διθύραμβοι are mentioned v. 10.

ib. Deos...canit refers to the ὕμνοι and παιᾶνες; reges to the ἐγκώμια; vv. 17–20, to the ἐπινίκια—the only works of his of which we have more than fragments; v. 21, to the θρῆνοι.

19. Centum potiore signis. Cp. the opening of the fifth Nemean Ode,— οὐκ ἀνδριαντοποιός εἰμ' ὥστ' ἐλινύσοντά μ' ἐργάζεσθαι ἀγάλματ' ἐπ' αὐτᾶς βαθμίδος ἑσταότα.

Probably Horace means by potiore, that which will outlast statues. Pindar's contrast (l. c.) is between poetry, actively spreading fame by recitals and publication, and statues which cannot leave (αὐτᾶς βαθμίδος, "their actual base") the place where they are set up.

23. Aureos, i. e. his noble character; like Shakespeare's 'golden opinions,' Macbeth, Act I. Sc. VII.

25. Multa, "full and strong." The stanza is expressed in Gray's Progress of Poesy, III. 3,—

'O! Lyre divine, what daring spirit
'Wakes thee now? Though he inherit
'Nor the pride nor ample pinion
'That the Theban eagle bear,
'Sailing with supreme dominion
'Through the azure deep of air.'

ib. Cycnum. Cp. Pope's Temple of Fame,—

'Four swans sustain a car of silver bright,
'With heads advanced and pinions stretched for flight;
'Here.....Pindar rode.'

27. Ego, apis. Horace compares himself to the swan, in Carm. II. XX. 1-16. This humbler comparison is after Lucret. III. 11.

35. Sacrum clivum, a part of the Via Sacra, along which triumphal processions passed to the Capitol. (See more on Epod. VII. 7.)

36. Sygambros, on the Lower Rhine, between the Luppia fl. and Segus fl. (just below Bonn.) The Romans had suffered defeats from the tribes in that quarter; and Augustus spent two years in Gaul to secure the frontier. See Chronol. Table, B.C. 16-13.

37. Cp. Ov. ex Ponto, I. II. 100.

44. Forum litibus orbum=a justitium. Cp. Cic. Legg. II. XII. 29.

49. Teque. Triumphus is here personified and addressed. Dum procedit, "while Cæsar moves on in procession." Cp. Ov. Trist. IV. II. 47, sqq. Tuque dum procedis is another reading. It suits the context well; and a change of persons is avoided. Antony, the favourite of Augustus, is supposed to lead, or take a prominent part in the procession; and he is again addressed (te decem) in the following stanza. On the other hand (in preferring the reading of the text, and best MSS.) it appears that the abruptness in changing the address is not too great for lyric poetry; and though Io Triumphe sounds more naturally as an exclamation (Cp. Ov. Am. I. II. 34), yet Triumphus is similarly personified in Epod. IX. 21, and the stanza may be taken as in parenthesis, the regular structure of the Ode, as addressed to Antony, being returned to in v. 53.

57. Fronte curvatos, i. e. with its horns (cornibus primis, Carm. III. XIII. 4,) sprouting like the partial crescent of the moon when three days old, and with a white star on the forehead. Comp. Moschus, Id. II. 84-88, (in the story of Jupiter and Europa):—

τοῦ δ' ἤτοι τὸ μὲν ἄλλο δέμας ξανθόχροον ἔσκε, Κύκλος δ' ἀργύφεος μέσσῳ μάρμαιρε μετώπῳ
* * * * * *
ἴσαδ' ἐπ' ἀλλήλοισι κέρα ἀνέτελλε καρήνου,
Ἀντυγος ἡμιτόμου κεραῆς ἅτε κύκλα σελήνης.

CARM. III.—AD MELPOMENEN.

2. Hesiod, Theog. 81,—ὅντινα τιμήσωσι Διὸς κοῦραι μεγάλοιο, γεινόμενόν τ' ἐσίδωσι διοτρεφέων βασιλήων, τῷ μὲν ἐπὶ γλώσσῃ γλυκερὴν χείουσιν ἐέρσην, τοῦ δ' ἔπε' ἐκ στόματος ῥεῖ μείλιχα.

With the poets, the look implied the favour of the divinities.

3–10. There is a contrast not unlike this in Ov. Fast. II. 11–16.

4. Clarabit, an old and rare word.

17. Aureæ. Pind. Pyth. I. 1,—χρυσέα φόρμιγξ.

19. Mutis. Cp. Ov. Met. IV. 50,—'Verterit in tacitos juvenilia corpora piscos.' So ἀναύδων ἰχθύων, Soph. Fragm. 700. Lucr. II. 342,—

24. Spiro, "that I have the spirit of poetry."

CARM. IV.—DRUSI LAUDES.

Drusus. Nero Claudius Drusus Germanicus (but to be distinguished from the great Germanicus Cæsar, his son.) He was son of Livia Drusilla, step-son of Augustus, brother of the emperor Tiberius, father of the emperor Claudius. Ovid says of him, Fast. I. 597,—'Et mortem et nomen Druso Germania fecit.'

2. Regnum in aves. Comp. Pind. Pyth. I. 7,—αἰετὸς.....ἀρχὸς οἰωνῶν; and Olymp. XIII. 21.

4. Ganymedæ. See Virg. Æn. V. 252–7.

11. Rel. dracones. Compare Æsch. Choeph. 247,—αἰετοῦ...θανόντος ἐν πλεκταῖσι καὶ σπειράμασι δεινῆς ἐχίδνης.

13. Capreæ, "the roe-deer."

17. Rætis=Ræticis, Bentley's correction for Ræti. Rætia, in its widest sense, comprised Vindelicia: Ræ. Propria, or Prima, contained the E. of Switzerland and the Tyrol. The war celebrated in this Ode is related in Merivale, Hist. Rome, ch. XXXV. vol. IV. p. 202. He adds,—'It is impossible not to marvel 'at the extraordinary power of the Roman arms, which could thus, in a single 'campaign, storm, rifle, and dismantle the great central fortress of modern 'freedom.'

20. Securi. Hence Ovid's epithet of the Amazons,—'securigeras,' Epist. IV. 117. Comp. ex Ponto, III. I. 95,—'Non tibi Amazonia est pro me sumenda securis.' This weapon is identified with the σάγαρις in the Phil. Mus. vol. I. p. 115.

21. Quærere distuli, "I will not stop to inquire into the origin of their adopting "the battle-axe as their weapon of war." The excuse made for this somewhat awkward parenthesis is, 'ut loco de Vindelicis aliquantum immoraretur' [O.]; or, that it is a sarcastic allusion to some rival poem. 'Quid si mordet D. 'Marsi poema Amazonida? in quo nimis operosum fuisse auctorem colligas 'ex Mart. IV. 29.' [G.]

22. Nec scire fas est omnia. 'Scaliger comparari jussit Pind. Nem. V. 16.' [O.]

24. Revictæ, "conquered in their turn."

29. Comp. Eurip. Alcmæ. Frag. 7; Pind. Pyth. VIII. 44; and Plato, Menex. c. 5,—ἀγαθοὶ ἐγένοντο διὰ τὸ φῦναι ἐξ ἀγαθῶν.

38. Metaurum flumen. Obs. Metaurus declined adjectively; so 'flumen Rhenum,' Ars Poet. 18. The battle was fought B.C. 207. (Its importance is not overrated in this ode. See the striking account of it in Arnold's Hist. ch. XLVI.)

40. Cp. Æsch. Pers. 301,—λευκὸν ἦμαρ νυκτὸς ἐκ μελαγχίμου.

41. Adorea, "glory, victory;" from ador, "corn," an allowance of it being anciently a frequent reward of public merit; as e. g. in the story of Manlius, Liv. V. 47.

42. Ut=ex quo. Gr. ἐπεί. 43. Tædas, 'silvam piniferam,' Orelli.

43. Flamma. Cp. Hom. Il. σ. 605,—Μαίνετο δ' ὡς ὅτ' Ἄρης ἐγχέσπαλος ἢ ὀλοὸν πῦρ οὔρεσι μαίνηται βαθέης ἐν τάρφεσιν ὕλης.
And again, v. 490. So κελαινῇ λαίλαπι ἶσος, λ. 747. In ξ. 396, the shout of battle is compared to the roar of a forest conflagration.

44. Equitavit, (an instance of the figure zeugma;) Angl. "careered." Comp. Eur. Phœn. 211,—Ζεφύρου πνοαῖς ἱππεύσαντος. So Virg. Æn. II. 418.

45. Secundis...laboribus, i. e. "with constant success."

47. Tumultu. For the distinction between tumultus and bellum, see Cic. Philipp. VIII. 1.

48. Rectos, "upright;" literally, of the statues which had been thrown down; but metaphorically, "restored to their honours:" ἀνωρθωμένους. In Soph. Œd. T. 50, στάντες ἐς ὀρθὸν καὶ πεσόντες is the term for "in prosperity and adversity."

49. Dixitque tandem. Liv. XXVII. 54,—'Hannibal tanto simul publico familiarique 'ictus luctu agnoscere se fortunam Carthaginis fertur dixisse.'

52. Cp. Vell. Pat. II. 82,—'Hanc tamen Antonius fugam quia vivus exierat, vic-'toriam vocabat.'

54. Virg. Æn. III. 12,— 'Feror exsul in altum
'Cum sociis natoque Penatibus et magnis Dis.'

57. Ut ilex. Pindar, Pyth. IV. 264, speaks of the nobles of the state, under the metaphor of the branches of the oak. The whole passage was perhaps in Horace's thoughts. Cp. the Boat-song in Scott's Lady of the Lake, II. 19,— 'Ours is no sapling.....
'Moored in the rifted rock,
'Proof to the tempest's shock,
'Firmer he roots him the ruder it blow.'
Compare Liv. VI. 1,—'Velut ab stirpibus lætius feraciusque renatæ urbis;' and XXIX. 3,—'Majorem semper frequentioremque pro tot cœsis exercitibus 'subolescentem.' See especially XXVI. 41, ad fin.

61. Hydra, the Lernæan Hydra. Ov. Met. IX. 69. τὴν ἀμφίκρανον καὶ παλιμβλαστῆ κύνα, Eur. Herc. F. 1274.

63. Monstrum, the dragon's teeth sown by Jason. Ov. Metam. VII. 122. Submisere. Lucret. I. 8.

64. Echioniæ. Echion was one of the σπαρτοί, or race of dragon's teeth sown by Cadmus. Ov. Met. III. 126.

65. Evenit. The reading in Orelli here is eviet, a conjecture adopted with no MS. authority. And in confirmation of his reading, he quotes exies from Tertullian —a strange author to refer to in such a question. Bentley reads proruit and gerit. But the change of tense is not harsher than in E. I. X. 40,—vehit followed by serviet; or in Juv. XIV. 296,—'cadit.....premetur;' and it may probably be accounted for by observing that merses expresses a single immediate action; luctere, a progressive continuous conflict: to the former a present answers, as a future to the latter. (Transiet appears to be used by Tibull. I. IV. 27.) To the objection that evenit is rarely used, or less properly, than exit, in the sense required, it may be replied, first, that Horace is noted for recurring to the primary radical meaning of words; secondly, that in one sense at least of exeo, evenio is its exact synonym. Compare 'exit locus' in Virg. Æn. V. 492, or 'sors exitura' in C. II. III. 37, with the common phrase 'provincia evenit,' Livy, XXVII. 22, 36.

66. Compare Livy, XXVII. 14,—'Seu vicit, ferociter instat victis; seu victus est, 'instaurat cum victoribus certamen.' (Hannibal loq. de Marcello et Romanis.)

76. Expediunt. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 632,—'Ducente Deo flammam inter et hostes 'Expedior...'

ib. Acuta belli. ὀξὺν Ἄρηα, Hom. Orelli assigns this last stanza to Hannibal, comparing the conclusion of Pind. Ol. IV. and Nem. I. Ritter (with Mr. Conington's approval) takes it as a recurrence to the subject, making Hannibal's speech end at interempto. Surely the first and usual interpretation (Orelli's) is more natural and more true. The prophetic compliment sounds better when put thus historically, and the structure of Lyric Poetry and Horatian usage argue still more for it. The comparison of such elaborate Odes as the 5th and 27th of the Third Book seem to prove, that Horace would not return to his subject after going off upon an illustrative history or example.

CARM. V.—AD AUGUSTUM.

1. Divis...bonis, i. e. Diis propitiis nate.

ib. Romulæ, as again in Carm. Sæc. 47, and Virg. Æn. VI. 877, for Romuleæ. Cp. the double forms cærulus and cæruleus, punicus (as Epod. IX. 27,) and puniceus, faginus and fagineus: or as Metaurum above, Carm. IV. 38; and so Dardana arma, Virg. Æn. II. 618; and below, Carm. VI. 7, Dardanas turres.

5. Lucem. Cp. Eur. Herc. F. 531; Orest. 243.

6. Instar veris. So Theocritus, Id. XIII. 45, of a Nymph,—ἔαρ θ' ὁρόωσα Νυχεία, i. e. "cheerful as the spring." Compare Shakespeare, in the opening lines of Richard III.

14. Compare Apoll. R. III. 994,— μητέρες αἵ νύ ποτ' ἦδη

Ἡμέας ἠιόνεσσιν ἐφεζόμεναι γοάουσι.

15. Desideriis icta. Æsch. Ag. 1204,—ἱμέρῳ πεπληγμένος.

17. The benefits of Augustus' government are similarly described in Vell. Pat. II. 89. Compare also Ov. Nux, 143. Compare the picture of good government, Hom. Od. τ. 109-14,—ἐξ εὐηγεσίης, ἀρετῶσι δὲ λαοὶ ὑπ' αὐτοῦ.

19. Pacatum, i. e. "cleared of pirates."

23. Catull. LXI. 221,—'Sit suo similis patri

41. Jam, Gr. ἤδη, i. e. after marriage.

43. Docilis governs a genitive in Sat. II. II. 52.

CARM. VII.—AD TORQUATUM.

Torquatus, addressed again in Epist. I. V, is supposed to have been son or nephew of the consul (Carm. III. XXI. 1;) or, according to a probable conjecture, Caius Nonius Asprenas, who received the agnomen Torquatus from Augustus, as related in Suet. Vit. Oct. 43.

1. Gramina. See Conington on Virg. Geor. II. 332.

2. Meleager, CX. 4,—καὶ φύτα θηλήσαντα νέοις ἐκόμησε πετήλοις.

3. Mutat terra vices. See Lucret. V. 737-747.

5. Cp. Milton, P. L. IV. 267,—

'Airs, vernal airs,
'Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
'The trembling leaves, while universal Pan,
'Knit with the Graces and the Hours in dance,
'Led on the eternal spring.'

9. Soph. Aj. 670,—νιφοστιβεῖς χείμῶνες ἐκχωροῦσιν εὐκάρπῳ θέρει.

ib. Proterit. Cp. Virg. Æn. XII. 330,—'Agmina curru Proterit' (i.e. "tramples down in advancing.)"

13. Reparant. Ov. Met. I. 11.

14. Compare Catull. V. 4,—

'Soles occidere et redire possunt:
'Nobis, cum semel occidit brevis lux,
'Nox est perpetua una dormienda.'

Cp. also the famous αἴ αἴ ταὶ μαλαχαί, Mosch. Id. de Bione, 103; and (in Scripture) Job, XIV. 7—12, where observe, that the last verse corrects and completes the idea.

So too Sir W. Scott's famous Lament over Pitt and Fox, in the Introduction to Marmion, beginning

'To mute and to material things
'New life revolving summer brings, &c.

But the closest comparison with this Ode of Horace will be found in Young's Night Thoughts, N. 6, (with this difference between the ancient and the Christian poet, that the latter finds in his subject the proof of man's immortality):

'Look nature through, 'tis revolution all;
'All change, no death; day follows night, and night
'The dying day; stars rise, and set, and rise.
'Earth takes the example. See the Summer, gay
'With her green chaplets and ambrosial flowers,
'Droops into pallid Autumn: Winter gray,
'Horrid with frost and turbulent with storm,
'Blows Autumn and his golden fruits away,
'Then melts into the Spring: soft Spring, with breath
'Favonian, from warm chambers of the South
'Recalls the first. All, to reflourish, fades;
'As in a wheel all sinks, to reascend:
'Emblems of man, who passes, not expires.'

16. Pulvis et umbra. Soph. El. 1159,—σποδόν τε καὶ σκιὰν ἀνωφελῆ. Ib. 244,—γᾶ τε καὶ οὐδὲν ὄν. Add Ov. Am. III. IX. 59,—'nomen et umbra.'

17. Cp. Eurip. Alc. 784.

19. Amico...animo. This may be taken as in the ablative case, thus—"Your heir will squander all you give him in your liberality." But it seems more Horatian if interpreted as φίλον ἦτορ, φίλον κῆρ, and in the dative (so amica mater=φίλη μήτηρ, Sat. II. III. 57.), "All you give to your own enjoyment, "is so much saved from your heir's cupidity." Cp. ψυχᾷ δοῦναι, Theocr. XVI. 24.

21. Splendida. An epithet more proper of the court and tribunal, than of the judgment (arbitria) given.

.....Μίνωα ἴδον Διὸς ἀγλαὸν υἱὸν Χρύσεον σκῆπτρον ἔχοντα θεμιστεύοντα νεκύσσι. Hom. Od. λ. 567.

The choice of poetic figure, by which to enlarge the simple notion cum semel occideris, was probably suggested by Torquatus' own profession as an advocate (alluded to in Ep. I. v. 8, 9). Then splendida will mark the contrast between "the grand last doom" (as Mr. Conington translates,) and the common earthly law-courts and trials.

26. Liberat Hippolytum. According to a later, and Latin legend, Hippolytus was restored, Virg. Æn. VII. 765.

27. Theseus...Pirithoo. Hom. Od. λ. 631; Ov. Trist. I. v. 19; and Virg. Æn. VI. 617,— 'Sedet æternumque sedebit
'Infelix Theseus.'

CARM. VIII.—AD CENSORINUM.

Caius Marcius Censorinus, Cons. B. C. 8. Paterculus says of him, that he was born to do good, and win men's hearts by it,—'demerendis hominibus genitus,' II. 102.

1. Donarem, &c. Cp. Ovid, ex Pont. IV. VIII. 31, sqq. Gifts on particular and marked days, on birthdays, New Year's Day, (hence the allusion in Tibull. III. I. 1, sq.), or the Saturnalia, were customary at Rome; and they are to be reckoned (see Paley's Introduction to Ovid's Fasti) among the influences exercised upon modern society by Roman usage. The French have even derived their term for New Year's gifts, 'étrennes,' from the Latin 'strenæ;' for an account of which see the Dict. Antiq. in voce, (and see Walckn. Hist. Horace, XIV. § 8).

3. Tripodas præmia. Cp. Hom. Il. ψ. 259; Virg. Æn. V. 110.

5. Artium, i.e. "works of art." So 'Didymaonis artes,' Virg. Æn. V. 359.

ib. Protulit. . 'Bene de re nova et admiranda,' [G.] 'Exquisitum verbum tanquam inventor artis fuerit quam perfecisset. Eodem s. Tibull. x. 1.' [M.]

ib. Scopas, of Paros, architect and sculptor. His statue of Apollo (placed eventually by Augustus in the temple on the Palatine) is described very happily by Propertius, II. XXXI. 5. He was the artist engaged on the decoration of the Mausoleum, i.e. about 350, B. C.

10. Deliciarum. Cicero uses this word in the same sense, Verr. IV. 23; and 'hinc Seneca, Hipp. 210,—'domos delicatas talibus refertas vocat.' [M.]

12. Pretium dicere, "to assign the true value to; to appraise the gift."

13. Notis, i.e. "inscriptions." For the sentiment, cp. Epist. II. I. 248. Orelli supposes a reference here to the statues set up by Augustus in his forum, as a gallery of great men. Steiner conjectures that the subsequent ideas (vv. 15—17) are founded on some groups in statuary or painting, representing Scipio's conquests.

17. Non incendia. This, in its most natural sense, signifies the destruction of the city in the 3rd Punic war. By some it is understood of the burning of the camp, Liv. XXX. 5, or the fleet, Liv. XXX. 43,—so as to refer the whole subject to the elder Africanus. It might perhaps, as [M.] suggests, be taken for a metaphor corresponding to Virgil's 'tanti incendia belli,' Æn. I. 556. Bentley and others condemn the verse as spurious, on account of the apparent confusion between the two Scipios, also on account of the defect in cæsura. For another (a metrical) question, see the Table of Metres, p. XVII. Preface.

18. See Liv. XXX. 45,—'Africanum cognomen militaris prius favor an popularis 'aura celebraverit, an, sicuti Felicis Sullæ Magnique Pompeii patrum memoria, 'cœptum ab assentatione familiari sit, parum compertum habeo. Primus certe 'hic imperator nomine victæ ab se gentis est nobilitatus. Exemplo deinde 'hujus,' nequaquam victoria pares, insignes imaginum titulos claraque cog- 'nomina familiæ fecere.' Ovid's list of agnomina (Fast. I. 593) is worth remembering.

34. Vota...ducit, i.e. "is honoured as a divinity." Cp. Virg. Ecl. V. 80, 'damnabis votis.'

CARM. IX.—AD LOLLIUM.

Marcus Lollius, Cons. B. C. 21; legate in Gaul B. C. 16; where he suffered a defeat, classed with that of Varus by Tacitus, Annal. I. 10. See above on C. II. 36. The character drawn by Horace is hard to reconcile with other notices of him.

5. Non, si priores. Comp. Cicer. Orat. c. 2,—'Nam in poetis non Homero soli locus est,' &c.

8. Stesichori. Reputed the inventor of choral poetry. His proper name is said to have been Tisias. He was of Himera, and his statue there is mentioned by Cicero in Verr. II. II. 35. His palinode is alluded to in Ep. XVII. 44. Pliny (X. 29) has a story, that 'in ore Stesichori infantis luscinia cecinit.' Quintilian (X. I. 62) says of him,—'Stesichorum quam sit ingenio validus materiæ 'quoque ostendunt, maxima bella et clarissimos canentem duces, atque Epici 'carminis onera lyra sustinentem. Reddit enim personis in agendo simul et 'loquendo debitam dignitatem (quo refertur vox 'graves,' O.): ac si tenuisset 'modum videtur æmulari proximus Homerum potuisse.' 18. For direxit, we ought perhaps to substitute derexit. See Munro on Lucr. VI. 823. Derectos is read in Cic. de Senectute, 59. Cp. Tac. Ann. II. 45. It is a frequent error in MSS. to substitute i for e; possibly owing to the Italian pronunciation: e for i is rarely found.

19. Ingens Idomeneus. ἐνὶ Κρήτεσσι, θεὸς ὡς ἔστηκε. Hom. Il. γ. 230:

23. Cp. Andromache's Lament over Hector, Il. ω. 729,—.

39. Consul; 41. judex; 44. victor. The subject of this noble passage is animus (compare the stanza, Carm. III. II. 17-20.) "The soul has an independent "dignity, so long as, true in principle and judgment, it rejects corruption, "and bursts in a moral victory through the host of vices," αἵτινες στρατεύονται κατὰ τῆς ψυχῆς. N. T. 1 Pet. II. 11.
This figure is borrowed by Lucian Vit. Auc. 8,—στρατεύομαι ἐπὶ τὰς ἡδονάς. Consul.....judex. Bentley has accumulated instances where animus is thus personified, e.g. 'contemptor animus,' Sal. B. Jug. 64. Cp. Virg. Æn. IX. 205. 'Victorem omnium voluptatum animum,' Senec. ad Marc. 23. So 'animus liberator, æstimator,' etc.

47. Beati. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Qu. V. 28, (where indeed the personification of vita beata in some degree parallels that of animus here.)

6. Alterum. So in Theocr. XX. 20, ἄλλος is used for ἀλλοῖος. ἐξαπίνας με θεὸς βροτὸν ἄλλον ἔτευξεν.

8, 9. This is taken from Terence, Hecyr. I. I. 17, (as quoted by the Scholiast.)

CARM. XI.—AD PHYLLIDEM.

2. Albani. The wine of Alba was reckoned among the best of the Italian wines.

4. Vis="abundance." So 'vim lacrimarum,' Cic. Somn. Sc.; 'vis auri argentique,' Tusc. Q. V. 32.

16. Findit. This word seems to contain an allusion to the origin and meaning of Idus, which is derived from the old Etruscan verb iduare=dividere.

17. Cp. Juv. XII. 1,—'Natali, Corvine, die mihi dulcior hæc lux.'

21. Occupavit. 'Occupat qui aliis prœripit.' [G.]

22. Non tua sortis, "one above you, out of your sphere;" as in v. 31, disparem, the opposite of te digna (v. 29.) Cp. τὸ κηδεῦσαι καθ' ἑαυτὸν (="to match according to his state") ἀριστεύει, κ. τ. λ., Æsch. P. V. 890.

Pindar draws this as the moral from the legend of Tityus,—τᾶν ἐν δυνατῷ φιλοτάτων ἐπιψαύειν. Pyth. IV. 92. To these quotations add Eur. Fr. Antiopa, 18; and Call. Ep. 1.

25. Ambustus. Ap. Rhod. IV. 599,—ἡμιδαὴς φαέθων.

32. Finis. Propert. I. XII. 20.

CARM. XII.—AD VIRGILIUM.

Ad Virgilium. The general authority of critics is against identifying this Virgil with the poet. Bentley, indeed, in spite of his own chronology for this Book of Odes (which he dates as B. C. 17—15, i.e. three or five years after Virgil's death), seems to take the identification for granted. Mitscherlich and Dillenburger affirm it, and so does the Baron Walckenaer (livr. III. 26), who argues that v. 25, studium lucri, accords with the character of Virgil, as indicated by the property and wealth he left behind him; and that the title 'ad Virgilium negotiatorem,' found in some MSS., might have been a jest upon some speculations in which at the time the poet had engaged. This supposition, however, is open to the objection that a negotiator signifies more properly a "banker," or "man of business," than one 'interessé dans quelque entreprise maritime.' And upon the whole, Gesner, as quoted approvingly by Orelli, is right in saying that there is nothing in the Ode 'quod magis ad poetam quam ad quemvis alium Horatii sodalem pertineat.'

1. Quæ mare temperant. In Horace's age, no winter voyages were attempted. See C. I. IV. 2, and III. VII. 2.

2. Animæ...Thraciæ, "north winds," (a Greek idea, Hom. Il. ι. 5,—βορέης καὶ ζέφυρος τώτε θρήκηθεν ἵκηται); the ὀρνιθίαι, which brought the birds of passage. Columella (in Orelli, not.) says 'per dies triginta esse solent, tum et hirundo advenit.' Comp. v. 5.

5. Ityn. Hom. Od. τ. 522,—παῖδ' ὀλοφυρομένη Ἴτυλον φίλον.

7. Quod male. "Because she bitterly avenged the tyrant's (i.e. Tereus') crime." The story is given in Ov. Met. VI. 424, sq. Virg. Ecl. VI. 78.

9. [M.] on v. 1, compares Meleager, 110,— ἤδη δὲ πλώουσιν ἐπ' εὐρέα κύματα ναῦται

πνοιῇ ἀπημάντῳ ζεφύρου λίνα κολπώσαντες.

So with this line, cp. sq.;—χαίρει καὶ σύριγγι νομεὺς ἐν ὄρεσσι λιγαίνων.

11. E contr. Theocr. Id. I. 15.

16. Merebere, "you shall earn," (so below, v. 22, 'merce,') i.e. "you must contribute the nard, I the wine." Compare the invitation to Fabullus, in Catull. XIII.

17. Onyx, "a box."

18. Sulpiciis...horreis, "public wine-stores, or cellars." Sulpiciis might be a name denoting either contemporary or former owners. Horreum, as in Carm. III. XXVIII. 7.

22. Merce, Gr. ἐράνῳ. 23. Immunem=asymbolum. Terent. Phorm. II. II. 25.

26. Ignium, sc. rogi. 'Sic Virg. Æn. XI. 186; Ov. F. II. 559.' [O.]

CARM. XIII.—AD LYCEN.

6. Virentis, "blooming." Cp. 'viridi ab ævo,' Ov. Trist. IV. X. 17.

8. ὃς ἐν μαλακαῖς παρειαῖς νεάνιδος ἐννυχεύεις. Soph. Antig. 783.

13. Coæ. The island of Cos was famous for the manufacture of rich silken or gauze dresses. 'Conchylia Coa,' Juv. VIII. 101. Tibull. II. IV. 29,—

'Et Coa puellis
'Vestis, et e rubro lucida concha mari.'

15. Condita...inclusit. "Which Time has set down (or recorded) as past."

17. Decens...motus. 'Corporis decens et aptus motus, qui dicitur εὐρυθμία.' Quintil. Inst. I. 16. Cp. Tibull. IV. II. 8. Compare generally the elaborate description of Gray, Progress of Poesy, I. 3,—

'Where'er she turns, the Graces homage pay;
'With arms sublime, that float upon the air,
'In gliding state she wins her easy way:
'O'er her warm cheek and rising bosom move
'The bloom of young Desire and purple light of Love.'

(Which verses, however, are a more direct imitation of Barton Booth, as shown in Mitford's note.)

21. Notaque et, "and well known also for."...

25. Cornicis vetulæ. Carm. III. XVII. 13, 'annosa.' The age of the crow was proverbial. Cp. Juven. X. 247; Mart. X. LXVII. 5; Ov. Am. II. VI. 36.

28. Dilapsam. Some copies read 'delapsam' wrongly. 'Dilabitur quod dissipatur; delabitur quod decidit.' [Bentley.]

ib. Facem. Meleag. Ep. 49,— πυραυγὴς

πρίν ποτε, νῦν δ' ἤδη δαλὸς Ἀπολλόδοτος.

CARM. XIV.—AD AUGUSTUM.

This ode corresponds with the Fourth, entitled Drusi laudes, and celebrates in a similar strain his elder brother (Major Neronum, v. 14) Tiberius.

4. Titulos; as notis, Carm. IV. VIII. 13. Cp. Sat. I. VI. 17; Ov. F. II. 15,—

'At tua prosequimur studioso pectore, Cæsar,
'Nomina, per titulos ingredimurque tuos.'

5. Æternet, "perpetuate." Orelli instances, as other old words preserved by Horace, claro, Carm. IV. III. 4, indecoro, IV. 36; inimico, XV. 20; intaminatus, III. II. 18.

ib. Qua sol. Virg. Æn. VII. 100.

ib. Habitabiles...oras. Gr. τὴν οἰκουμένην.

7 Quem...didicere...quid...posses. Greek construction, illustrated by Elmsley, on Medea, 440. This Græcism is very rare in Latin: it is involved in the construction of v. 15, 'Spectandus...quantis:' it occurs in Liv. II. 12,—'Semet ipse aperiret quis esset;' and in Ter. Eunuch. V. VIII. 5. Compare Ars P. 435.

10. Genaunos. This tribe is placed by Orelli in the Tyrolese Val di Non (N. of Lago di Garda). They are commonly marked farther west.

11. Breunos, near Brunecken and the Brenner Mountain, which probably owes its name to them. In the epithet veloces, Donaldson (Varron. ch. II. p. 84, note) discovers a correspondence and possible allusion to the name Ras. (See note on S. I. VI. 1.) Cp. what Grimm says, as cited by Orelli on C. IV. II. 36, in reference to the meaning of the name Sygambri.

13. Plus vice simplici, "with more than a single or mere requital;" i.e. with an overwhelming slaughter. Comp. Liv. IX, 3,—'Multiplices pœnas expetitas'; and XXII. 54. Cp. the Æschylean line, Agam. 537,—διπλᾶ δ' ἔτισαν Πριαμίδαι θαμάρτια.

18. Devota. 'Significare videtur Gallorum Soldurios.' [G.] (On this subject see Cæsar, B. G. III. 22,—'Devotis quos illi Soldurios appellant,' and Long's note.)

21. Pleïadum, 'Atlantides,' Virg. Georg. I. 221, sisters of the Hyades, changed into stars on the neck of Taurus. 'Septem dici sex tamen esse solent.' Ov. Fast. IV. 170. Orelli quotes a fragment of Mœro (the Byzantine poetess, fl. 300 B.C.); αἱ (sc. "the Pleiads") δή τοι θέρεος καὶ χείματος ἄγγελοί εἰσι.

22. Scindente nubes, i.e. in storms, as

'Tantus se nubibus imber
'Ruperat.' Virg. Æn. XI. 548.

23. Frementem...equum. Campbell,—

'Furious every charger neighed,
'To join the dreadful revelry.'

24. Medios per ignes. Bentley quotes Silius, XIV. 175,—

'Si tibi per medios ignes mediosque per enses
'Non dederit mea dextra viam.'

And XV. 40,—

'Virtus te sæva jubebit
'Per medias volitare acies mediosque per ignes.'

Also Virg. Æn. VII. 296,—'Medias acies mediosque per ignes Invenere viam;'—where, however, he observes that there is no metaphor, but an allusion to the burning of Troy. Here he conjectures enses, but the verses he quotes in support of it have little in common with this passage, and seem to overlook its lyric character. The Gr. διὰ πυρὸς ἑναι is proverbial, for any danger. Ignes and gladios are joined together in Ov. Met. VIII. 76. πῦρ and φάσγανα, Eur. Phœn. 521.

25. Tauriformis. Gr. ταυρόμορφος, Eur. Ion, 1261. From the Homeric description of Scamander,—μεμυκὼς, ἠύτε ταῦρος, Il. φ. 237. Cp. Virg. Æn. VIII. 77, 'corniger;' and Georg. IV. 371. So Milton's 'horned flood,' P. L. XI. 831.

29. Claudius. The full name was Tiberius Claudius Nero Cæsar.

31. Metendo. Cp. the simile, Hom. Il. λ. 67,—οἱ δ' ὥστ ἀμητῆρες, κ. τ. λ.; and (for the exact word-parallel) Virg. Æn. X. 513,—'Proxima quæque metit gladio.'

32. Sine clade victor, i.e. without loss. Livy's 'incruentus devicit,' IX. 17. Hom. Il. p. 364, ἀναιμωτί. E contr. 'cum clade,' Liv. IX. 19.

34. Divos. This is equivalent to auspicia. Originally the Roman commander-in-chief received them with his imperium, and battles were said to be fought 'ejus ductu et auspicio' (see Liv. III. 1, and XXIV. 8); hence, even in victories gained by his lieutenants, as the achievement was ascribed to the auspicia, the honour belonged to him. Under Augustus and his successors, the auspices belonged to the emperor. Ov. Trist. II. 174,—'Auspicium cui (sc. duci) das grande decusque tuos.' Suetonius (Octav. 21), enumerating the conquered countries, says,—'Domuit partim ductu, partim auspiciis suis.'

40. Arrogavit, "and has added a fresh glory to your past commands." 'Arrogare antiquo et docto vocabuli usu pro addere. Cp. Liv. VII. 25, and Epist. II. 1. 35.' [Jani.]

44. Dominæ. Ov. Fast. IV. 831,—'Dominæque potentia terræ.'

45. Ov. Am. III. VI. 40.

47. Beluosus. The Homeric μεγακήτης. Some take it as corresponding to Juvenal's allusion, S. X. 14,—'Quanto delphinis balæna Britannica major.' But compare also Tac. Ann. II. 24,—'Quidam in Britanniam rapti et remissi...miracula 'narrabant vim turbinum et inauditas volucres, monstra maris ambiguas 'hominum et beluarum formas.'

CARM. XV.—AUGUSTI LAUDES.

1. Phœbus volentem. Cp. Virg. Ecl. VI. 3,—'Cum canerem reges,' etc.

2. Increpuit lyra, "checked me with his lyre." The same phrase occurs in the last line of Ovid's Fasti, expressing assent or approval. It seems to be one naturally applicable to a χοροδιδάσκαλος, who would interrupt (for correction or guidance) the musician, by striking notes on his own instrument.

3. Ne parva, sq. Cp. Pope's adaptation of this metaphor to poetic fame, Essay on Man, IV. 385,—

'Say shall my little bark attendant sail,
'Pursue the triumph and partake the gale?'

4. Vela darem. Used by Virgil with the same metaphor,—'Pelagoque volans da vela patenti.' Georg. II. 41.

8. Postibus. For the custom of suspending conquered spoils thus, see Virg. Æn. III. 287,—'Postibus adversis figo;' and VII. 183.

9. Janum Quirini, i. e. "closed the war-gate of Quirinus," (the tutelar deity.) This has been altered by editors to Janum Quirinum, as the appellation more usual in invoking Janus; but there is no MS. authority for the change, nor was Horace tied to that form in mentioning, not the god, but his temple, especially if (as Bentley suggests) Quirinus in the common formula was used adjectively. Quirinus was the name under which Romulus was worshipped, (Ov. Fast. II. 475) and is a name assigned to Augustus in Virg. Georg. III. 27.

ib. Clausit. Compare Ov. Fast. I. 121.

10. Evaganti. Used actively, with acc. case. The same force of ex in compounds is seen in exeo, evado, excedo; erepo. Still these verbs, though transitive, are not used in the passive voice.

12. Veteres...artes. 'Vetuste pro antiquos mores, vel virtutes, Græcis ἀρετάς.' [G.] Compare Virg. Æn. VI. 852,— 'Tu regere imperio populos, Romane, memento;

'Hæ tibi erunt artes.'

Cp. too Ov. Fast. II. 508,—'Et patrias artes militiamque colant.'

14. Imperi...majestas. Cic. pro Rab. 7; de Orat. II. 39; Quintil. VII. III. 35.

15. Ortus. Many editions read ortum here, with some MS. authority, but entirely against the usage of the best Latin authors: for, with the exception of the phrase ab ortu, (e. g. in Carm. III. XXVII. 12) the plural is regularly used as a general term of description, where the meaning is not restricted. (We may observe a parallel in the Gr. ἀνατολαί.) Thus Virg. Æn. VI. 255,—'Sub lumina solis et ortus.' Georg. III. 277,—'Non, Eure, tuos neque solis ad ortus.' Æn. IV. 118,—'Ubi primos crastinus ortus Extulerit Titan.' Comp. Georg. IV. 544. In Ov. Met. XIV. 386, the substitution of ortum for ortus seems due, as here, to the desire for a supposed euphony. But where the meaning is not local nor general, but limited,—as in Carm. IV. II. 58,—'tertium Lunæ ortum' (=the third phase, or quarter of the moon), or Virg. Georg. I. 432,—'ortu quarto;' or Georg. I. 441,—'nascentem ortum,'—the singular is, and must be, used.

16. Tibull. II. v. 57,—

'Roma, tuum nomen terris fatale regendis,

. . . . . .

'Quaque patent ortus (cp. preceding note) et qua fluitantibus undis
'Solis anhelantes abluit amnis equos.'

Add also, Ov. F. II. 136,—'Hoc duce Romanum est solis utrumque latus.'

18. Exiget. Used in the same sense as exactos, Carm. II. XIII. 31. 'Eximere (which is the word read here in many MSS.) 'de re molesta plerumque dicitur 'ut eximere curam, metum, spinas, atque alia ejusmodi.' [Bentley.]

19. Quæ procudit enses. Gr. φασγανουργός, Æsch. Cho. 647.

22. Edicta. So, above, the unconquered were called legis expertes Latinæ, Carm. IV. XIV. 7.

23. Seres. 'Nota Serum legatio Augusti amicitiam petere jussa. Vide Propert. III. IV. 5.' [M.]

28. Cp. 'Ante Jovem supplex per vota precatus,' Virg. Æn. IX. 624.

29. Virtute functos, "who have done their duty," "our renowned chiefs." Commentators quote Cic. Tusc. I. XLV. 109,—'Nemo parum diu vixit qui virtutis 'perfectæ perfecto functus est munere;' i. e. "he liveth long, who liveth well."

ib. More patrum. Cp. Cic. Tusc. I. 2,—'Canere ad tibicinem de clarorum hominum 'virtutibus.'

30. Lydis tibiis. Tibia (αὐλός) generally translated "flute," but when enlarged and ornamented, ('ovichalco vincta tubæque æmula,' Ars P. 202,) more like our flageolet, or even clarionet. For the tibiæ, or double flutes, see on Epod. IX. 5. Lydis is probably a mere poetical epithet, as Berecyntiæ in Carm. IV. I. 22; yet see what is said of the Lydian mode in the Dictionary of Antiq. (Art. 'Tibia,') p. 969.

32. Progeniem, i. e. "Æneas, our great ancestor." Compare inf. the title given to Augustus in Carm. Sæc. 50.

CARMEN SÆCULARE,

PRO INCOLUMITATE IMPERI.

An Ode accompanying the performance of the Ludi Sæculares. (See an account of them in Merivale, Hist. chap. XXXV.) They were celebrated by Augustus B. C. 17. Jani (in his argument to Carm. IV. VI.) characterises that Ode as a first attempt or preface to this,—'Sæculari carmini privatim præludit poeta, et quasi præfatur.' The sæculum is marked in v. 21, as a period of 110 years. With this invocation may, in some measure, be compared the Odes addressed to the deities in Æsch. Suppl. 625, sqq. and Soph. Œd. Tyr. 151. Refer also to Carm. I. XXI., and Catullus, XXXIV.

2. Comp. 'Astrorum decus et nemorum Latonia custos,' Virg. Æn. IX. 405. So too "Vos, O clarissima mundi Lumina,' sq. Georg. I. 5.

6. Virgines.....pueroscque. Twenty-seven in number of each, according to Livy, XXVII. 37, and XXXI. 12. [O.]

8. Dicere. This rare construction (an infinitive after moneo, when meaning to bid, or recommend) is found in Virg. Georg. I. 457,—'Ire, neque ab terra 'monent convellere funem.' Where, see Forbiger. It is observed that moneo is specially used of oracular or Divine commands, as in Tib. I. VI. 50, and III. IV. 5.

13. Aperire, "to aid the timely birth." Cp. ἃ μὲν (sc. Ἄρτεμις) ἔλυσεν ἐμῶν ὠδῖνα μολοῦσα. Antip. Ep. in Gr. Anthology.

15. Sive tu, etc. Compare Ζεὺς εἴτ' Ἀΐδης ὀνομαζόμενος στέργεις, Eur. Fr. Inc. 103. Catull. XXXIV. 21,—'Sis quocumque placet tibi 'Sancta nomine.'
Compare Plato, Cratyl. p. 400, § 38, ad fin. ὥσπερ ἐν ταῖς εὐχαῖς; κ. τ. λ. Cp. Æsch. Agam. 160,—Ζεύς, ὅστις ποτ' ἐστίν, εἰ τόδ' αὐτῷ φίλον κεκλημένῳ.....

16. Genitalis. Ἄρτεμις Λοχεία.

17. Producas, i. e. "bring to maturity." Diana is called ἐξ ἀρχῆς κουροτρόφος in Hes. Theog. 452. The same office belonged equally to Phœbus: see Hom. Od. τ. 86, and the Scholiast there. So (in the epigram quoted on v. 13,) Φοῖβος δ' εἰς ἥβαν ἄρσενας ἠγάγετο.

18. Decreta, the Lex Julia, de Maritandis Ordinibus, a law for the regulation of marriages, and the promotion of them. Degrading marriages were made illegal, and the illegality was a bar to receiving legacies: penalties were imposed on celibacy. This law appears to have passed B. C. 18; in A. D. 9 it was amended and added to, in the consulship of M. Papius Mutilus and L. Poppæus Secundus; after which time the title of the law is given commonly as Lex Julia et Papia Poppæa.

22. Orbis, "cycle."

23. Ter die, i.e. "for three days and nights celebrated by multitudes."

25. Veraces. An allusion to the oracles of the Sibylline books. Catull. LXIV. 307,—'Veridicos Parcæ cœperunt edere cantus.'

26. Quod semel dictum est. The proper notion of fatum, i.e. "a thing decreed." 'Fata sunt quæ divi fantur.' Serv. on Æn. II. 777.

ib. Stabilisque...terminus, i.e. "which the determinate issue of events keeps up," (i.e. carries out to completion.) Cp. 'Concordes stabili fatorum numine Parcæ,' Virg. Ecl. IV. 47.

ib. Terminus, "a bound, or limitation;" hence, "a final decision, not to be overstepped." So τέρμα, Eur. Suppl. 617,—ἀπάντων τέρμ' ἔχοντες αὐτοί (sc. θεοί). Cp. Lucret. I. 78; Virg. Æn. IV. 614,—'terminus hæret.'

29, sq. Æsch. Suppl. 689.

30. Imitated by Tibull. I. I. 15,—'Flava Ceres tibi sit nostro de rure corona Spicea.'

37. Vestrum est opus, i.e. founded under your auspices and your direction. Cp. jussa, v. 39; and, with that, Virg. Æn. IV. 345.

41. Sine fraude. So Carm II. XIX. 20.

46. Senectuti placidæ. 'Placida egregie dicitur senectus, quæ sibi placet, prorsus 'contenta est vita et ante acta et ea quæ etiamnunc ipsi concessa est.' [Orelli.] I transcribe the note, partly as indicating the emphatic force of the epithets here used, partly as coinciding remarkably with the well-known lines of The Christian Year,—

'Such calm old age as conscience pure
'And self-commanding hearts ensure.'

49—51. Quique...imperet is the reading of many MSS. and Editions; but it is, perhaps, only a mistaken correction of the more difficult reading of the text. It is certainly less suitable to the context. Imperet, however, need not have the emphatic meaning 'dominetur toti terrarum orbi;' it will be simply poetical for 'sit,'—"Let him reign(=be) over victorious." (See on Sat. II. II. 32.)

49. Veneratur. Veneror is here used with the sense and construction of precor, governing a double accusative. Cp. Sat. II. VI. 8; and Cic. ad Fam. VI. 7,—'Qui multa deos venerati sunt contra ejus salutem.' Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 34—36.

51. Bellante prior. Virg. Æn. VI. 854.

52. Lenis. Cp. Ov. Trist. V. II. 36,—'Sæpe suo victor lenis in hoste fuit.'

54. Albanas, "Roman," alluding to the colonisation from Alba.

ib. Secures, i.e. the civil administration, as distinct from the military power alluded to in the preceding verse.

55. Cp. Suet. Aug. 21—'Quæ virtutis moderationisque fama Indos etiam et Scythas, 'auditu modo cognitos, pellexit ad amicitiam suam populique R. ultro per 'legatos petendam.' To the same effect [O.] quotes the Monumentum Ancyranum.

61. Fulgente decorus arcu. Cp. ἀργυρότοξος Ἀπόλλων, Hom. Il. β. 766. On fulgente, see Paley's note on Eur. Ion, 285,—Πύθιος ἀστραπαί τε Πύθιαι.

63. Cp. Ov. Met. I. 521, 'opifer.'

67, Lustrum may be an allusion to the recent extension of Augustus' προστασία. In the year preceding these Secular Games, he had received the empire for five years. See Clinton, F. H. (B.C. 18), and the historic passages quoted. Accordingly, the critics understand lustrum literally; (proprie, non infinite, O.) Fea agrees with Orelli, in making felix agree with lustrum. But the flow of verse and the position of the word attach it more naturally to Latium, and the combination of felix and alterum, in agreement with one noun, is unusual and harsh.

69. Aventinum. Diana had a temple there.

70. Quindecim viri, the custodiers of the Sibylline books. See Dict. of Antiquities, p. 316, Art. 'Decemviri Sacris Faciundis.'

Q. HORATI FLACCI EPODON LIBER.

CARM. I.—AD MÆCENATEM.

It is commonly believed that this Epode was written at the time, and in anticipation, of the projected expedition and contest which culminated in the battle of Actium. But there is nothing to prove this. All that can be gathered from the Epode itself is, that an armament was preparing, that Mæcenas was to take part in it, and the poet to accompany him. Now the evidence is pretty clear that Mæcenas was not at Actium. On the other hand, it is equally clear that he did go on the Sicilian expedition against Sextus Pompeius in B. C. 36; and while one author (Appian, v. 99) speaks of the Liburnian galleys engaged in it, Dion speaks of the height and solidity of Octavian's ships (a description illustrating 'alta navium propugnacula.') Further, the phrase 'ibis inter' expresses much more naturally accompaniment than attack. Finally, it is at least probable that the verse, C. III. IV. 26, contains an allusion to the remarkable storm which overtook the fleet off Cape Palinurus. (See these arguments in detail in Mr. Dyer's Essay, in the Classical Museum, vol. II. p. 199, sqq. See also Merivale's note, vol. III. ch. XXVII. p. 272.)

1. Alta...propugnacula. The ships in Antony's fleet were of unusual height and size, having as many as 10 banks of oars (δεκήρεις, Plutarch's Life of Antony). Virg. Æn. VIII. 692, compares them to floating islands: 'Cycladas aut montes,' &c.

5. Vita si. This seems to be a blending of the two constructions 'si superstes mihi eris,' and 'te superstite.' Vita sit is found in several good copies, and is not unlikely to be the true reading. Yet the context si contra favours the common one.

7. Persequemur otium. A phrase used by Cicero, de Off. III. 1.

13. Sinum. Cp. 'Extremi sinus orbis,' Virg. Geor. II. 123.

16. Gr. ἀπτόλεμος καὶ ἄναλκις, Hom. Il. β. 201.

18. Cp. Ovid, Ep. XIX. 110,—'Cogit et absentes plura timere locus.'

19. Ut...avis serpentium. Æsch. Sept. c. Th. 291,—δράκοντας ὥς τις τέκνων ὑπερδέδοικεν...πελειάς.

21. Non, ut adsit. Hom. Il. λ. 116,—'Η δ' (sc. ἔλαφος) εἴπερ τε τύχῃσι μάλα σχεδόν, οὐ δύναταί σφι χραισμεῖν.

23. Militabitur bellum. 'Eleganter et nove dictum,' Schol. With this construction may be compared that of 'res certabitur' in Sat. II. v. 27. Milito is properly an intransitive verb, as in C. III. XXVI. 2.

25. Propertius (IV. I. 129) expresses wealth in much the same way,—'Tua cum multi versarent rura juvenci.'

28. Calabris...Lucana mutet, i.e. go from Calabria into Lucania. 'Calabris saltibus adjecti Lucani' (Ep. II. II. 177) were coveted by cattle-owners, as affording them alternations of summer and winter pasturage, the woods and hills of Lucania supplying the first, the mild soft climate of Calabria the second.

CARM. II.

A description of a country life, put into the mouth of an usurer, Alfius. See the concluding lines, which give the poem a satiric cast. 'Ejusdem Alfii ('fenerator Alfius,' v. 67) meminit Columella, I. VII. 2.....Cum vitæ rusticæ descriptione, comp. Virg. Geor. II. 458, sqq.; Mart. I. 56; et e Græcis, Aristoph. Fragm. apud Stob. Flor. 213.' [M.] This last passage is numbered in Dindorf, 344 Νῆσοι. It affords a close parallel to the Epode:

ὦ μῶρε, μῶρε, ταῦτα πάντ' ἐν τῇδ' ἔνι, οἰκεῖν μὲν ἐν ἀγρῷ τοῦτον ἐν τῷ γηδίῳ ἀπαλλαγέντα τῶν κατ' ἀγορὰν πραγμάτων, (cp. v. 1) κεκτημένον ζευγάριον οἰκεῖον βοοῖν, (v. 3, 'suis') ἔπειτ' ἀκούειν προβατίων βληχωμένων, (v. 11) τρυγός τε φωνὴν εἰς λεκάνην ὠθουμένης, ὕψῳ δὲ χρῆσθαι σπινιδίοις τε καὶ κίχλαις, (v. 34) καὶ μὴ περιμένειν ἐξ ἀγορᾶς ἰχθύδια (v. 48) τριταῖα πολυτίμητα βεβασανισμένα ἐπ' ἰχθυοπώλου χειρὶ παρανομωτάτῃ.

5. Cp. Bacchyl. Fr. 9 (P. Gr. p. 153),— χαλκεᾶν δ' οὐκ ἔστι σαλπίγγων κτύπος, οὐδὲ συλᾶται μελίφρων ὕπνος ἀπὸ βλεφάρων. So Tibull. I. I. 4.

8. Cp. Mart. V. XX. 5. The irksome round of officia (Sat. II. VI. 24; E. I. VII. 8, 'officiosa sedulitas,' and v. 75, 'mane cliens,') is here intended.

9. Adulta...propagine, i. e. with the layers as they grow up. For this mode of planting, see Virg. Georg. II. 26; and, for its application to vines, v. 63,—'Propagine vites respondent.'

13. Amputans. Virg. Georg. II. 407,—'fingitque putando.'

14. Inserit. Cp. v. 19, insitiva. Grafting (inserere) is described Virg. Georg. II. 73.

15. Pressa...mella. Comp. Virg. Georg. IV. 140,— 'Spumantia cogere pressis
'Mella favis.'

17. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 521,—
.....'Varios ponit fetus autumnus, et alte
'Mitis in apricis coquitur vindemia saxis.'

19. Ut, used interjectionally, as in C. III. XXV. 12. So in Cic. Att. III. XI. 2,—'Ut...desidero.' Sallust, Hist. Fr. Lib. I,—'Ut te neque hominum neque deorum pudet.'

ib. Insitiva...pira. Cp. e contr. 'mutatamque insita mala Ferre pirum,' Virg. Geo. II. 33. Cp. Prop. IV. II. 18.

21. Priape, the god of gardens. Virg. Georg. IV. 111,— .....'Custos furum atque avium cum falce saligna
'Hellespontiaci servet tutela Priapi.'
Cp. Sat. I. VIII. 3. For the offerings to him, cp. Catull. XIX. 20.

22. Silvane. Virg. Æn. VIII. 601.

23, sqq. Cp. Milton, Il Penseroso,—

'And when the Sun begins to fling
'His flaring beams, me, Goddess, bring
'To arched walks of twilight groves, 'And shadows brown, that Sylvan loves: (Cp. v. 22)

. . . . . .

'There in close covert, by some brook,
'Where no profaner eye may look,
'Hide me from day's garish eye;
'While the bee, with honied thigh,
'That at her flowery work doth sing,
'And the waters murmuring,
'With such consort as they keep,
'Entice the dewy feathered sleep.'

25. Labuntur...ripis. Cp. Lucr. II. 362,—'Summis labentia ripis.' (Rivis has fair MS. authority. This citation is against it.)

27. Fontesque...obstrepunt, scil. jacenti. There is an elegant (but needless) reading proposed instead of the existing one, viz. frondes, making lymphis the dative, not the abl. case. The verse would then correspond to Prop. IV. IV. 4,—'Nativis obstrepit arbor aquis.'

And Theocr. I. 1,—'Αδύ τι τὸ ψιθύρισμα καὶ ἁ πίτυς, αἴπολε, τήνα
'Α πόρτι ταῖς παγαῖσι μελίσδεται.

Cp. also Ov. F. III. 18,—

'Dum sedet, umbrosæ salices volucresque canoræ
'Fecerunt somnos, et leve murmur aquæ.'

28. Quod invitet="so as to invite sleep." The proper antecedent to quod is involved in, or understood with, the verbs preceding.

29. Annus hibernus. So C. III. XXIII. 8. So Virg. Æn. VI. 811,—'frigidus annus.' So Tibull. I. I. 13, 'novus annus' is synonymous with ver.

32—48. Compare the description of the Swiss in Goldsmith's Traveller.

39. In partem juvet. Cp. Eur. Elect. 71,—

40. Virg. Geor. II. 523,—

'Interea dulces pendent circum oscula nati,
'Casta pudicitiam servat domus.'

41. Sabina. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 532; Ov. Medic. Fac. 11, sq.; and Carm. III. VI. 38,—'Sabellis.....et severæ Matris.'

ib. Perusta, "sunburnt and hardy." Gr. ἡλιωμένος. Cp. Carm. I. VIII. 4.

43. Compare Gray's Elegy; st. 6:

'For them no more the blazing hearth shall burn,
'Or busy housewife ply her evening care;
'No children run to lisp their sire's return,
'Or climb his knees the envied kiss to share.'

48. Dapes inemptas. So Virg. Georg. IV. 133. Compare the praises of Peace in Aristophanes,— πολλὰ γὰρ ἐπάσχομεν πρὶν ποτ' ἐπὶ σοῦ γλύκεα κἀδάπανα καὶ φίλα. Pac. 593;

and the complaints in Arist. Acharn. 34—36. The phrase is copied by Claudian, in Ruf. I. 206.

49. Lucrina, from the Lucrinus Lacus, near Baiæ. Juvenal, Sat. IV. 141, mentions the Lucrinum Saxum as famous for its oysters. Nearly all these delicacies are enumerated again in Sat. II. II.

51. Intonata. A word of rare form and usage.

53. Afra avis, the Guinea-fowl, Numida meleagris. (See the legend of the name in Ov. Met. VIII. 541, sq.) Martial calls them Numidicæ guttatæ (i. e. "spotted or speckled)," III. LVIII. 15.

54. Attagen Ionicus. Cp. Mart. XIII. 61. Probably the woodcock, which abounds in Greece and its coasts.

57. Gravi. Compare the epithet for malvæ, in Carm. I. XXXI. 16, leves, i. e. "light of digestion."

58. Malvæ. These are mentioned as humble or labourer's fare in Ov. Fast. IV. 697.

59. Terminalibus. For the honours of Terminus, see Ov. Fast. II. 640, sqq.

63. Cp. Virg. Ecl. II. 66; Ov. F. V. 497.

65. Ditis examen domus. Orelli cp. Tibull. II. I. 23,—'Turbaque vernarum saturi bona signa coloni.'

70. i. e. When he had called in all his money, being on the point of turning farmer and applying it accordingly, he could not resist the effect of habit, and the temptation of the kalends: he returned to his negotia.

The interest on loans was calculated at Rome by the month, and notices or claims of payment would be made accordingly. The Ides are mentioned as "a pay day," Sat. I. VI. 75.

CARM. III.—AD MÆCENATEM.

An invective against garlic, as worse than hemlock (v. 3) or poison (v. 5), or the drugs of Medea or Nessus. Mæcenas, apparently, in jest (jocosus, v. 20) had had the vegetables seasoned with it.

3. Edit. An old form, edim,-is,-it, for edam. It occurs again in S. II. VIII. 90. Cicero has the archaisms perduint (for perdant), duint (for dent), in Or. pro Deiot. VII. 21; Catil. I. IX. 22.

The actual punishment of parricide is alluded to by Juvenal, Sat. VIII. 214.

4. Messorum. Virg. Ecl. II. 10,—

'Fessis messoribus æstu
'Alia serpullumque herbas contundit olentes.'

7. Me fefellit. This is to be construed with incoctus, as the Gr. ἔλαθεν.

9. Præter omnes candidum. Apollo. Rh. III. 443, 918.

13. Hoc delibutis. From delibuo, a verb of the same root as the Gr. ἀλείφω. Obs. that the principal idea is here expressed by the participle; the subordinate one, by the verb.

ib. Pellicem, "her rival." Cp. inf. Epod. V. 63, where the story is given more fully.

15. Vapor, "heat," Lucret. I. 491; Virg. Æn. V. 683.

16. Siticulosæ. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 353,—'Hiulca siti findit Canis æstifer arva' So 'sitiunt herbæ,' and 'sitientes Indos,' Geor. IV. 402, 425. 'Homerico πολυδιψίου' (sc. Il. δ. 171.) [M.]

21. Savio, properly "the lip," as osculum, Carm. I. XIII. 15. Catullus, XCIX. 2, uses the diminutive saviolum,—'Saviolum dulci dulcius ambrosia.'

CARM. IV.

An invective against some unknown person, raised unworthily to office. (Compare Catull. LII.) This person has been commonly identified with Pomp. Menas (mentioned in the note on Carm. III. XVI. 16), who was, however, an officer of the navy, not of the army, as is implied in v. 20: others give him the name of Vedius Rufus. Orelli quotes two inscriptions from the copies:—

(1.) 'Ad Sextum Menam Pompeii libertum.'

(2.) 'Vedium Rufum ex servitute miratur usurpasse equestrem dignitatem usque ad tribunatum militarem.'

(On this subject see Class. Museum, vol. II. p. 208. Mr. Dyer holds that Menas is the person attacked, and argues from Dio, XLVIII. 25, that he did hold military as well as naval commands.)

1. Lupis et agnis. Hom. Il. χ. 293; Aristoph. Pax, 1075; Ov. Ibis, 43.

ib. Sortito obtigit. This phrase is from Plautus, Merc. I. II. 25.

3. Ibericis...funibus, "made of the spartum, or Spanish broom." (Comp. Quintil. Inst. O. VIII. II.)

8. Bis trium ulnarum toga, i. e. a showy sumptuous dress, as 'amplissima veste' (worn by the matrons in their rejoicing), Liv. XXVII. 52. E contra. 'arta toga,' Epist. I. XVIII. 30.

The Scholiast quotes Cicero's sarcastic description, 'velis amictos non togis,' Catil. II. 10, which corresponds to Juvenal's (X. 39) 'aulæa togæ.' Bis ter is found in several MSS. but it is bad Latin, and seems but a copyist's explanation of the figure III. or the abbreviated form bis $\bar{t}$. Trium is a correction generally adopted.

9. This may, perhaps, be properly translated thus,—"See how a free (i. e. unreserved, undisguised) scorn alters the countenance of all who pass along." All commentators, however, appear to construe ora as oculos; vertat as synonymous with either convertat or avertat, (i. e. scorn draws all eyes on you, or turns them away). But no one has adduced any instance of verto, when uncompounded and without a preposition, bearing this meaning.

11. Cp. Anacreon, Fr. 19,— πολλὰ μὲν ἐν δουρὶ τιθεὶς αὐχένα πολλὰ δ' ἐν τροχῷ, πολλὰ δὲ νῶτον σκυτίνῃ μάστιγι θωμιχθεὶς,

. . . . . .

νῦν δ' ἐπιβαίνει σατινέων (Cp. v. 14.)

ib. Triumviralibus. The Triumviri Capitales ('vindices rerum capitalium,' Sall. Cat. 55) were charged with the execution of the penal sentences of the law. This invective may in a general way be compared with that of Juvenal against the elevation and insolence of the slave,—

'Verna Canopi...
'Nuper in hanc urbem pedibus qui venerat albis.' Sat. I. XXVI. 111.

12. Præconis. It seems to have been the office of the præco to proclaim the grounds of the punishment during its infliction. Juvenal's expression (though not to be confounded in meaning) may be compared,—'Hebetes lasso lictore secures.' Sat. VIII. 136.

15. Sedilibusque, etc. i. e. "and he is made an Eques." The sedilia prima were the fourteen rows of seats behind the senators in the orchestra, assigned by L. Rosc. Otho (Lex Roscia Theatralis, 67 B. C.) to the Equestrian order. Hence, 'sedere in quatuordecim' is a phrase to express taking rank as an eques. See Cic. ad Fam. x. 32,—'In quatuordecim sessum deduxit.' So Sueton. J. Cæsar, 39. Compare the opposite phrase,—

'De pulvino surgat equestri,
'Cujus res legi non sufficit.' Juv. Sat. III. 154.

Equites could not take advantage of this law without possessing the census equestris of 400,000 HS.

16. Othone contempto. There is some difficulty here. Why is Otho said contemni, unless (which no one supposes) this intruder broke the law? Gesner and Bentley ingeniously explain it 'that he was independent of the law, having 'complied with its requirements.' But if we suppose (and it is a probable supposition) that Otho intended to admit none but ingenui et cives into the order, and that the property qualification was proposed with this view, it will be clear that this elevation of wealthy base-born adventurers defeated his purpose, and that they took their seats "in despite of, or against the spirit of, his law."

17. Ora navium...rostrata 'Sine exemplo dictum videtur.' [O.] Bentley ingeniously conjectured æra, but unnecessarily.

19. Latrones...servilem manum. This is understood of the fleet of Sextus Pompeius, of whom similarly Florus, IV. VIII. 2, says,—'Quam diversus a patre! Ille 'Cilicas exstinxerat, hic secum piratas navales agitabat.' Comp. inf. Epod. IX. 10,—'Servis amicus perfidis.'

CARM. V.

In this Epode is described an assembly of Neapolitan witches, meeting for their magical rites: Canidia is the chief, assisted by Sagana, Veia, and Folia. (They are similarly described, Sat. I. VIII. 19—36.) Their purpose is to compose a charm (amoris poculum, φίλτρον) for Varus. (Horace represents himself in Epode XVII. as spell-bound by such a charm.) The principal act is the burial of a child alive, up to the chin. (The Ode opens with an appeal to them as they strip him, and closes with his curse.) The atrocity of offering puerorum exta is charged by Cicero upon Vatinius, (In Vat. 6.)

Orelli quotes, from the Latin Anthology, an epitaph upon a child supposed to have been so sacrificed. It may be remembered that charges of the kind were not unfrequently brought, by the malignant, against the early Christians. The minor ceremonies (vv. 17—24.) may be compared with the witch-scenes in Macbeth.

1. At, o deorum. A resemblance has been traced between this passage and the speech of P. Calavius in Livy, XXIII. 9.

5. Partubus...veris, "if you have really borne children." Cp. Epod. XVII. 50.

7. Commentators illustrate this from Quintil. Decl. 340,—'Illud sacrum prætex-'tarum, quo sacerdotes velantur, quo magistratus: quo infirmitatem pueritiæ 'sacram facimus ac venerabilem.' So [D.] cites 'custos purpura' from Pers. Sat. V. 30.

9. Noverca. Cp. C. III. XXIV. 18; and Eur. Ion, 1025,— φθονεῖν γάρ φασι μητρυιὰς τέκνοις.

12. Insignibus, i. e. the toga prætexta (or purpura, v. 7) and the bulla, worn by children of high rank.

13. Comp. Shakesp. Henry VI. Pt. III. Act I. Sc. IV,—
'That face of his, the hungry cannibals
'Would not have touched,' &c.

15. Implicata viperis, i. e. like a Fury or Gorgon. Cp. 'Crinita draconibus ora,' Ov. Met. IV. 770; Virg. Æn. VI. 281; VII. 329—447.

17. Caprificos. Cp. Juv. X. 145; Mart. X. II. 9.

20. Nocturnæ strigis, a bird of ill omen. See Ovid's description, Fast. VI. 131, sq.; and compare 'strigis infames alas,' in Met. VII. 269.

21. Iolcos, in Thessaly, famous as the port from which the Argonauts sailed.

ib. Hiberia, in Pontus, between Armenia and Colchis. Virgil speaks of 'Ponto lecta venena,' adding 'nascuntur plurima Ponto,' Ecl. VIII. 95.

26. Avernales. Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 512.

28. Currens, "a rushing boar." 'Furens,' Schol. There is no objection to this, but that a mere epithet is out of place here, unless it were such an one as silvestris or Laurens (Bentley's conjecture,) which might correspond to marinus. It is easy to see that, though joined with aper, it has reference to Sagana.

31. Ingemens, "panting, sobbing," with her exertion. Lucret. V. 210; Virgil, Georg. I. 46.

34. Inemori, an unusual compound. Chishull (in Mus. Crit.) compares ἐναποθνήσκειν.

37. Exsucta, "drained out," i. e. by hunger, and the torturing expectation of food.

39. Interminato, i. e. interdicto, from inter and minor; a rare compound, and used in a passive, not (as usually) in a deponent sense.

41. Non defuisse, i. e. adfuisse. Masculæ, "unfeminine, unnatural."

43. Otiosa...Neapolis. 'In otia natam
'Parthenopen.' Ov. Met. XV. 711.

47. Irresectum..... pollicem. Furies and hags seem to have been represented with long claw-like nails. So the ghost in v. 93. Cp. Sat. I. VIII. 26, where the witches are said 'scalpere terram unguibus.'

50. Arbitræ. Milton has adopted this word,—'Overhead the moon sits arbitress.' Par. L. I. 785.

50–52. Cp. Medea's invocation, Ov. Met. VII. 192,— 'Nox, ait, arcanis fidissima.....
'Tuque, triceps Hecate, quæ cœptis conscia nostris
'Adjutrixque venis.'

51, 52. Comp. Shakesp. Henry VI. Pt. II. Act IV. Sc. IV,— 'Deep night, dark night, the silent of the night,
'The time when screech-owls cry and ban-dogs howl,
'And spirits walk, and ghosts break up their graves;
'That time best fits the work we have in hand.'

55. Formidolosis. Cp. Virg. Georg. IV. 468,—'Caligantem nigra formidine lucum.'

58. Suburanæ, "in the Subura," a suburb in Rome of ill-repute.

61. Compare Theocr. II. 15,— φάρμακα ταῦτ' ἔρδοισα χερείονα μήτε τι Κίρκας, μήτε τι Μηδείας.

69. Indormit. The sense seems to be—"his couch is anointed with charms, that "should make him forget all but me;"—cubilibus unctis oblivione pellicum. Others take it thus,—cubilibus pellicum omnium (i. e. nescio cujus) unctis oblivione (scil. mei.)

71. Ah! Ah! An exclamation implying discovery of the truth, viz. that he is freed from her spell by some skilful enchantress.

76. Marsis. The Marsi were famous for magic arts. Compare 'Marsis quæsitæ 'montibus herbæ' (and the context), Virg. Æn. VII. 758.

81. Flagres uti, etc. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 81, 83.

82. Atris is understood to denote the thick smoky flame thrown out by bitumen. [M.] cites Ov. Met. XIV. 792,—'fumante bitumine;' and Virg. Æn. VII. 457,—'atro lumine fumantes fœdas.'

85. Compare Eur. Hel. 630,— πολλοὺς δ' ἐν μέσῳ λόγους ἔχων οὐκ οἶδ' ὁποίου πρῶτον ἄρξομαι τὰ νῦν.

86. Thyesteas, "such as Thyestes might have uttered." Comp. Cic. Tusc. I. 44,—'Exsecratur luculentis sane versibus apud Ennium Thyestes,' sqq.

87. Venena magnum, etc. "The great law of Divine justice cannot influence sor-"ceries (i. e. sorcerers) as they can men. Therefore I will entreat no more, "but exsecrate. I will not appeal to you as if you had natural feeling, and "could be softened." So Orelli. But, in this construction, would not valet be more Horatian than valent? Will it not be better (while following Orelli in the main points) to reverse the order, and take venena for the nom. case? Thus—'Sorceries (and those who use them) cannot change (i. e. turn aside or 'defeat) the Divine laws, as they can men and men's law. Therefore I appeal 'to them: such an appeal will draw down a wrath implacable.'

88. Humanam vicem, "in human fashion—after the manner of men." Cp. 'tuam vicem doleo' (Cic. Fam. XII. 23), "I grieve as if I were in your place;" 'Sardanapali vicem mori,' Cic. Att. X. 8, "like Sardanapalus." 'Res familiaris 'obsidis vicem esse apud rempublicam videbatur.' Gell. XVI. 10.

89. Agam. So Gr. κακοῖς ἐλαύνομαι ("I am persecuted,") Eur. Andr. 8.

92–96. Comp. Ov. Ibis, 145—158.

93. Umbra. 'Omnibus umbra locis adero.' Virg. Æn. IV. 386.

99. Different, "shall tear apart." So Gr. διαφέρω, and διαφορέω.

100. Esquilinæ alites, i. e. "carrion birds of prey." There was a 'miseræ plebi commune sepulcrum,' (Sat. I. VIII. 10) on the Esquiline, whence it is called 'atras Esquilias,' Sat. II. VI. 33. (See the description in Cookesley's Map of Rome, and Index, p. 84.)

102. Effugerit. This future here may be taken as a quasi-optative.

CARM. VI.

An invective, directed, according to an old inscription, In Cassium Severum (of whom see Tacit. Ann. IV. 21); but this is by no means certain. Some contend that Mœvius is meant (comp. Epod. X.) or his fellow-poet Bavius (of whom see Virg. Ecl. III. 90.) Compare Ben Jonson, 'Every Man out of his Humour,' where Macilente is described as 'a lean mongrel.....chop-fallen 'with barking at other men's good fortunes.'

3. Quin...vertis? Quin, "why not?" used interrogatively with indicative mood. See similar instances in Liv. I. 57,—'Quin.....conscendimus?' Virg. Æn. IV. 99,—'Quin.....exercemus?'

5. Molossus, a breed of dogs in Epirus (see Conington on Geo. III. 405.) Compare Lucret. V. 1062.

ib. Lacon. So Shakesp. Mids. N. Dream, Act IV. Sc. 1,—

'I was with Hercules and Cadmus once,
'When in a wood of Crete they bayed the boar
'With hounds of Sparta.....'
'My hounds are bred out of the Spartan kind.'

6. Vis. Lucret. VI. 1221,—'Fida canum vis.' Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 132.

9. Voce complesti. Lucr. l. c.,—'Latrant et vocibus omnia complent.'

10. Projectum odoraris, "you sniff at, and are ready to take the food thrown to you." Cp. Cerberus in Virg. Æn. VI. 422,—'Corripit objectam (sc. offam) atque immania terga resolvit,' sq. Without metaphor, the meaning is,—"Your "show of fierceness is soon quieted by any bribe."

13. Cp. Ov. Ibis, 53,—'In te mihi liber iambus
'Tincta Lycambeo sanguine tela dabit.'

ib. Gener, Archilochus—of whom see Theocr. Epig. 19,— Ἀρχίλοχον καὶ στᾶθι καὶ εἴσιδε τὸν πάλαι ποιητάν, τὸν τῶν ἰάμβων, οὗ τὸ μύριον κλέος διῆλθε κἠπὶ νύκτα καί ποτ' ἀῶ· ἦ ῥά μιν αἱ Μοῦσαι καὶ ὁ Δάλιος ἠγάπευν Ἀπόλλων ὡς ἐμμελὴς τ' ἔγεντο κἀπιδέξιος ἔπεά τε ποιεῖν πρὸς λύραν τ' ἀείδειν.

14. Hostis. Hipponax of Ephesus. Theocr. Ep. 21,— ὁ μουσοποιὸς ἐνθάδ' Ἱππώναξ κεῖται· εἰ μὲν πονηρὸς μὴ ποτέρχευ τῷ τύμβῳ· εἰ δ' ἐσσὶ κρήγυός τε καὶ παρά χρηστῶν, θαρσέων καθίζευ, κἂν θέλῃς, ἀπόβριξον.

CARM. VII.—AD POPULUM ROMANUM.

This and the 16th Epode, appealing against the madness and misery of civil war, were probably written on the occasion of the first discords between Antony and Octavianus and the war of Perusia, in 41 B. C.

3. Carm. II. 1. 33.

5. Invidæ. Orelli cp. Sall. Cat. 10,—'Carthago æmula imperi Romani.'

6. Romanus. The singular number is poetically used in a plural or collective sense, as in Sat. II. 1. 37; Virg. Æn. VI. 851.

7. Descenderet, i. e. be led in triumph down the Sacred Way. The captives in a triumph passed along the slope to the Forum, at which point the conqueror began 'in Capitolium currum flectere,' and they 'in carcerem duci.' Cic. Verr. V. 30. (Cp. 'sacer clivus' in Carm. IV. II. 35, and Cookesley's explanation in the Map and Index of Rome, p. 24.)

9. Comp. Hom. Il. α. 255,— ἦ κεν γηθήσαι Πρίαμος.....
εἰ σφῶιν τάδε πάντα πυθοίατο μαρναμένοιϊν.

11. Cp. Juv. XV. 159—65; Plin. H. N. 7, Præf.

13. Furor...an...vis acrior, nearly=ἀτασθαλίη, an ἄτη. Vis acrior seems to be ἃ μοιριδία δύνασις, Soph. Ant. 951; as, v. 17,—'acerba fata;' i. e. "What is it "hurries us thus to destruction? Is it a frantic infatuation of our own, or a "greater force, the force of Destiny? or the effects of guilt?" The answer is given in v. 17,—"It is our bitter destiny; but that is the consequence of guilt."

18. Scelus, πρώταρχος ἄτη, Æsch. Ag. 1192; 'an ἄγος, or cause of guilt,' inducing successive calamities:
πήματα...ἐπὶ πήμασι
οὐδ' ἀπαλλάσσει γενεὰν γένος.
See the chorus, Soph. Antig, 585—598. So sacer (v. 20) is ἐναγής, i. e. "entailing a curse, and requiring expiation."

19. Remi. See the story of his death in Ov. F. IV. 837—52; Liv. I. 7. It is made an instance for argument in Cic. Off. III. 10.

CARM. IX.—AD MÆCENATEM.

A triumphant celebration of the victory of Actium.

5. Tibiis...lyra. The lyre and flutes were commonly used in mutual accompaniment. They are mentioned together in Hom. Il. σ. 495; Theocr. Epigr. 5; Pindar, Ol. III. 8; XI. 93. There is in the British Museum a set of tibiæ with a lyre, which were found together in a tomb at Athens. Pairs of tibiæ were more frequently used than the single instrument. They were distinct, not united in one, but the mouth-pieces were sometimes passed through a band (capistrum.) Herodotus (I. 17), in speaking of the martial music of the Lydians, makes mention of συρίγγων, πηκτίδων, and αὐλοῦ γυναικηίου καὶ ἀνδρηίου, i. e. (probably) tibiæ sinistræ et dextræ, our "treble" and "tenor." The two tibiæ may have resembled our hautboy and bassoon. (The first is the natural treble of the latter.)

6. Dorium...barbarum, The ancient music had three principal modes (i. e. scales of different pitch),—the Dorian, Phrygian, and Lydian. Each was one tone higher than the other. The Dorian was the lowest. The Phrygian (here called barbarum) the next.

7. See Merivale, Hist. Rome, vol. III. ch. 27, (p. 246.)

ib. Neptunius. S. Pompey assumed the title of 'Son of Neptune.' Dio, XLVIII. 19.

8. Ustis navibus. So. by Octavian. Dio, XLIX. 10.

12. Emancipatus, "made over," as slave, or subject to. From manus, capio, as expressing the legal symbol for transfer of land or any property, are derived manceps, "a purchaser, or owner," mancipium, "a sale, contract, or ownership," or "a slave," as in E. I. VI. 39. So, res mancipi: mancipo, "I transfer or make over to," as in E. II. II. 159. Hence, emancipo is properly "to give up out of one's own power, to release, or free;" and with a dative, as here, "to sell or surrender." So it is used by Plaut. Bacchid. I. I. 59,—'Tibi me emancupo: tuus sum.' So by Cic. Phil. II. 21,—'Venditum atque emancipatum tribunatum.'

ib. Feminæ, i. e. Cleopatra.

16. Conopium, "a gnat or mosquito net." κωνώπειον, fr. κώνωψ, "a gnat." Cp. Propert. III. XI. 45,—'Fœdaque Tarpeio conopia tendere saxo.'

17. At hoc frementes. The readings of the MSS. are very various,—ad huc, ad hunc, at huc; the last having most authority. Ad hoc, "hereupon" (πρὸς ταῦτα), is one of the simplest corrections. At hoc is preferred by Orelli; and he takes hoc as the acc. after frementes, quoting Tacit. Ann. XIII. 13. The sense will be—"Crying out indignantly upon this, indignant at it." Cp. Virg. Æn. XI. 132,—'Unoque omnes eadem ore fremebant;' and Livy, IX. 3,—'Cum pro ingenio quisque fremerent;' and IX. 5,—'Hæc frementibus hora fatalis ignominiæ advenit.'

18. Galli, i. e. the Galatian troops of Deiotarus and Amyntas, who went over from Antony to Octavian. (See Plutarch's Life of Antony.)

ib. Canentes. Compare Virg. Æn. VII. 698,—'Ibant æquati numero regemque canebant.' (Where see Forbiger.)

20. Puppes sinistrorsum citæ, "backed towards the left," i. e. eastward. Puppem ciere seems=πρύμναν ἀνακρούεσθαι, "to back water."

21. Tu moraris? i.e. "Why do you delay? when shall Cæsar celebrate his triumph?"

22. Intactas. Virg. Georg. IV. 540,—'Intacta totidem cervice juvencas.' Victims were not to have been used for any meaner purpose, that were consecrated to the gods. So Hom. Il. κ. 293,—ῥέξω βοῦν...ἀδμήτην. So Odyss. γ. 383. Compare the story in Southey's Kehama, C. VIII.

25. Africanum. The reading Africano is evidently a corruption.

26. This is a poetical figure, to express that the ruins of Carthage are the monument of its conqueror. Cp. Μνῆμα μὲν Ἑλλὰς ἁπᾶσ' Εὐριπίδου, ὀστέα δ' ἴσχει γῆ Μακέδωνι. Gr. Anth. III. 25; and ἀντὶ τάφου λιτοῖο θὲς Ἑλλάδα, Ib. III. 5.

27. Puniceo=puniceo (older form pœniceo,) "scarlet." So called from the Pœni, the dye being derived from them. (See Lachmann and Munro on Lucr. II. 829.) The sense is,—"He laid aside his scarlet imperatorial mantle (paludamentum,) "for the dark common military cloak (sagum.")

Martial opposes the one to the other, VI. XI. 7,—

'Te Cadmea Tyros, me pinguis Gallia vestit;
'Vis te purpureum, Marce, sagatus amem?'

The purpureus color however was different from puniceus, or its synonym coccineus; though it might in a general way be used for it; as in S. II. VI. 102—106.

28. Mutavit. Lachm. l. c. 'scribendum est mutabit.'

30. Ventis...non suis, i. e. with ill luck to him, misfortune attending him. Non suis, "not propitious." So, 'non meus,' Tibull. III. III. 28. Forbiger, on Virg. Æn. II. 396,—'haud numine nostro,' has many quotations to illustrate this use of suus, e.g. Æn. V. 832,—'Ferunt sua flamina classem.' So Ov. Trist. V. v. 60,—'Implessent venti si mea vela sui.' Cp. meus in Ov. Ep. XII. 84, 'Sed mihi tam faciles unde *meo*sque Deos?' And noster in Liv. IX. 19,—'Numquam nostris locis laboravimus.' Cp. Virg. Æn. XII. 187. Cic. de Cl. Or. 1, has 'alienissimo reip. tempore,' closely followed by and contrasted with 'suo magis quam suorum civium tempore.'

32. Incerto mari, i. e. "with roving, uncertain course." The epithet may be taken properly of the trackless, unconfined waters; but is probably a poetic hypallage for incertus. (This interpretation, ipse incertus, is written above the verse in Hl.-A.) The two ideas are joined in the well-known opening of Byron's Corsair. These surmises as to Antony's fate show how recent and incomplete was the news of the event.

34. Chia. Chian wines are intended by Virgil's 'vina Ariusia,' Ecl. V. 71; and 'rex ipse Phanæus,' Geo. II. 98.

CARM. X.—IN MÆVIUM POETAM.

An invective against Mævius, of whom see Virg. Ecl. III. 90.

4. Memento. Is there any other instance of this verb being followed by ut, instead of an infinitive?

5. Inverso. Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 43,—'Evertitque æquora ventis.' [M.]explains this from Virg. Æn. I. 125,—'Imis stagna refusa vadis;' and Æn. II. 419,—'Imo Nereus ciet æquora fundo.'

13. Cum Pallas. Hom. Od. δ. 499; Eurip. Troad. 65, sqq.; Virg. Æn. I. 39,—

'Pallasne exurere classem
'Argivum atque ipsos potuit submergere ponto,
'Unius ob noxam et furias Ajacis Oilei?'

22. Porrecta. Bentley conj. projecta: Fea fairly objects that it is a less significant word, being used of those who escape from, as well as those who die by, wreck; quoting Lucr. V. 223; Ov. Pont. II. III. 30.

24. Agna Tempestatibus. Cp. Virg. Æn. V. 772,—'Tres Eryci vitulos et Tempestatibus agnam,' (cp. Ib. III. 120;) in v. 776 occurs the sacrificial word porricit, making a singular correspondence with this passage. Compare further Ov. Fast. VI. 193,— 'Te quoque, Tempestas, meritam delubra fatemur,

'Cum pæne est Corsis obruta classis aquis.'

(This refers to the dedication of a temple to Tempestas by Scipio after his conquest of Corsica in B. C. 259.)

CARM. XI.—AD PETTIUM.

1. Pettius. Nothing is known of this friend of Horace.

4. In pueris. Cp. phrase and construction in Ov. Met. VII. 21,—'Quid in hospite, regia virgo, areris?' Cp. Carm. I. XVII. 19, 'in uno;' Virg. Æn. II. 541, 'in hoste.'

6. Honorem decutit. Virg. Georg. II. 401.

8. Fabula. 'Fabula, nec sentis, tota jactaris in urbe.' Ov. Am. III. I. 21. 'Fabula fias,' Epist. I. XIII. 9. E contrar. Ov. Trist. IV. X. 68,—'Nomine sub nostro fabula nulla fuit.'

10. Latere, etc. i. e. "sighs." Cp. Shakesp. As You Like It, Act II. Sc. VII,—'The lover sighing like furnace.' And again, Ib. Act V. Sc. II.

'To love!
'It is to be all made of sighs and tears.'

ib. Petitus.. Plaut. Cistell. I. I. 57,—'Hoc sis vide: ut petivit suspirium alte!' Call. Ep. XLV. 1,— ὡς ἀνιηρὸν πνεῦμα διὰ στηθέων, εἶδες, ἀνηγάγετο.

11. Nil valere. The infinitive by itself, generally, as here with the interrogative ne, expresses emotions of surprise or indignation. So Virg. Æn. I. 37.

12. Querebar. The complaint is that of Tibullus, II. III. 49; and Anacreon (Anacreontea, 31),— σοφίη, τρόπος, πατεῖται, μόνον ἄργυρον βλέπουσιν.

13. Inverecundus deus, scil. 'aperit præcordia Liber.' Sat. I. IV. 89. Cp. Carm. III. XXI. 16. Contr. 'verecundum Bacchum,' Carm. I. XXVII. 3.

15. Inæstuet. This is the reading of some editions, with little MS. authority. It would mean,—"But if this is a free and high-spirited resentment that is boiling in my breast," &c. But v. 11 implies, not that he feels anger, but only threatens it in idle despair.

16. Libera bilis. Nearly K. Lear's phrase, Act II. Sc. IV:

'Touch me with noble anger,
'And let not women's weapons, water-drops,
'Stain my man's cheeks.'

17. Fomenta, i. e. my sighs and complaints. Like its verb foveo, it corresponds properly to the metaphor volnus.

18. Imparibus, "unequal to me," viz. in character and talents ('candido ingenio,' v. 12). Some construe it, "My more successful rivals, with whom I contend on unequal terms:" but impar, when used of persons, denotes inferiority.

ib. Summotus pudor, i. e. desinam summoto pudore.

19. Ubi hæc...laudaveram, "when I had manfully expressed this determination, I "could not maintain it." 'Cum bene juravi pes tamen ipso redit.' Tibull. II. VI. 14.

ib. Te palam. Used like coram te, "openly in your presence." Orelli cites Ov. Trist. V. X. 39,—'Meque palam.'

CARM. XII.

4. Sagacius unus, This usage of unus with a comparative, not a superlative, is very rare. Orelli quotes Wagner on Virg. Æn. I. 15.

7. Vietis. The e is long: but see Munro on Lucr. I. 360.

CARM. XIII.—AD AMICOS.

2. Jovem. Cp. Carm. I. I. 25; XVI. 12; III. X. 8. Juppiter is identified with pater Æther, Lucret. I. 251; and so Virg. Georg. II. 325. See Eur. Frag. Inc. 1,— δρᾷς τὸν ὑψοῦ τόνδ' ἄπειρον αἰθέρα.

καὶ γῆν πέριξ ἔχονθ' ὑγραῖς ἐν ἀγκάλαις τοῦτον νόμιζε Ζῆνα, τόνδ' ἡγοῦ θεόν.

Cicero, in N. D. I. 15, after declaring the Stoic doctrine, 'ipsum mundum Deum esse,' goes on thus,—'Idem (sc. Chrysippus) disputat, æthera esse eum 'quem homines Jovem appellarent,' etc. Comp. Acad. II. 41. He gives a section to the subject, N. D. II. 25.

4. Virent, "are fresh," i. e. in their health and strength. So 'viridis senectus,' Virg. Æn. VI. 304. ποιῆν τι δεῖ ἂς (i. e. ἕως) γόνυ χλωρόν, Theocr. XIV. 70. For the general sentiment, comp. Theogn. 977,— ταῦτ' ἐσορῶν κραδίῃ εὖ πείσομαι ὄφρα τ' ἐλαφρὰ γούνατα, κ. τ. λ.

5. Obducta...fronte, "the clouded brow." Cp. Eur. Hipp. 173,—στυγνὸν ὀφρύων νέφος.

11. Centaurus, i. e. 'Chiron, δικαιότατος Κενταύρων,' Hom. Il. λ. 832. [O.]

ib. Alumno. Cp. Eurip. Iph. Aul. 926,— ἐγὼ δ' (Achilles loq.) ἐν ἀνδρὸς ἐνσεβεστάτου τραφεὶς Χείρωνος ἔμαθον τοὺς τρόπους ἁπλοῦς ἔχειν.

13. Assaraci. Hom. Il. ν. 232, 239. 'Domus Assaraci,' Virg. Æn. I. 284.

ib. Frigida. For the propriety of this epithet, Homer (Il. χ. 151) is quoted.

ib. Parvi. This adjective is at variance with Hom. Il. γ. 73, μέγας πόταμος βαθυδίνης. But [O.] shows that the conjectures proposed instead of it are worth little. And see the dissertation in Gladstone's Homer, vol. III. p. 514, on the difference between the Virgilian and Homeric descriptions of these two rivers.

14. Lubricus, "gliding, rapid." Cp. Ov. Fast. IV. 337.

15. Certo subtemine. Subtemen (in form corr. to examen for exagmen) is for subtegmen or subtexumen, from texo,—the "woof or main texture and body of the web woven." Cp. the description in Ov. Met. VI. 56,—'Inseritur medium radiis subtemen.' Here it may be construed simply "the thread of fate." Cp. Catull. LXIV. 328,—'Currite ducentes subtemina, currite fusi.' The original of Gray's (The Bard, ver. 49)—'Weave the warp, and weave the woof.'

18. Dulcibus alloquiis, "the sweet solace." Cp. Liv. IX. 6,—'Vultusque benigni et alloquia.'

CARM. XIV.—AD MÆCENATEM.

1. Imis...sensibus. The same phrase is found in Virg. Ecl. III. 54.

4. Traxerim, "quaffed;" an uncommon signification of traho. Doering quotes one instance of it from Valer. Flacc. III. 609. No doubt Horace substituted the word for the more usual duxerim, on account of the preceding ducentia. It is found in a kindred phrase, viz. 'auras ore trahit,' Ov. Met. II. 230; and corresponds to the Gr. ἕλκω, ἑλκύω, as in Eur. Cycl. 417; Ion, 1200.

7. Olim promissum. 'De hoc toto libro accipe qui nunc Epodon inscribitur..... 'significat magnam fuisse hominum de his Epodis expectationem.' Bentl. See the inference, a cumulative argument against part of Bentley's Chronology, drawn from this verse, in Class. Museum, vol. II. p. 209.

8. Ad umbilicum adducere, i. e. "to complete." The umbilici or cornua (Ov. Trist. I. I. 8) were bosses upon the end of the rollers on which the sheet of the volumen was rolled. Therefore, as evolvere librum is "to open or begin," ad umbilicum venire, or ducere, is "to come or bring to a close." Mart. IV. XCIV. 2.

11. Cava testudine...amorem. Cp. Virg. Georg. IV. 464.

13. Ureris, "you are in love," sc. with Terentia. Cp. the complimentary mention in C. II. XII. 13, sqq. We have no clear information as to the time of Mæcenas' marriage. If the dates of the various odes could be established, they might afford a clue. C. II. XII. implies a recent marriage; this Epode a courtship, and a successful one.

ib. Quod si, etc. "But think yourself a fortunate man, since Helen was not more beautiful."

CARM. XV.—AD NEÆRAM.

3. Numen læsura, i. e. by faithlessness, perjury. (Compare the Ode to Barine, Carm. II. VIII.) Cp. Ov. Her. II. 43. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 19,—'Divos, quamquam nil testibus illis Profeci.'

4. In verba jurabas. This phrase seems properly used of repeating the military oath. 'Citati milites apud trib. mil. in verba P. Scipionis jurarunt.' Liv. XXVIII. 29. So, conversely, præire verba, "to prescribe the form of oath," or præcipere, as in Liv. I. 59,—'Ut præceptum erat jurant.' Cp. Ov. A. A. I. 687, —'Jurabant omnes in læsi verba mariti.' Jurare in verba (Epist. I. I. 14) is used of adopting a particular teacher's rules.

5. Artius atque, "clinging closer than the ivy to the oak." Cp. Shakespeare, Mids. Night, Act IV. Sc. I:

'The female ivy so
'Enrings the barky fingers of the elm.'

15. Nec semel offensæ, "nor will my resolution yield to your charms, when once I "have taken offence at, or dislike to, them." Offensus is used together and synonymously with invisus by Cicero, pro Sest. 58.

16. Certus...dolor, "a settled resentment." Intrarit, sc. me: others have understood te, and interpreted the line as=si te pœnituerit. This would give a less proper sense to dolor.

17. Tibull. I. v. 69,—'At tu, qui potior nunc es, mea fata timoto.'

19—22. Cp. (on a different subject) Tyrtæus, Eleg.—

οὐδ' εἰ Τιθωνοῖο φυὴν χαριέστερος εἴη Πλουτοίη δὲ Μίδεω καὶ Κινύρεω βάθιον.

20. Pactolus. 'Vicinus Sardibus amnis,' "impregnated with gold by Midas," Ov. Met. XI. 137.

CARM. XVI.—AD POPULUM ROMANUM.

This is one of the most remarkable of all Horace's poems, both in its political and its poetic character. Politically considered, the sentiments of despair and the proposal of abandoning Italy are foreign (as Walckenaer remarks, vol. I. p. 82, livr. II. 16) to the true Roman temper, and imply an extinction of the old republican spirit. A proposal, indeed, of the kind had found supporters after the defeat at Cannæ; but it was checked at once (Liv. XXII. 53), and punished afterwards by the Censor (Liv. XXIV. 18.) These sentiments contrast strongly with those of other odes; e.g. C. III. III. in which, after eulogies on an undaunted and constant mind, the poet is thought to be protesting against any translation of the imperial power of Rome; or those in which one ruler and one restorer of law and order is recognised, honoured, and trusted; as in C. I. II. 25, sqq.; C. III. IV. 37, sqq.; III. XXIV. 27. In this Epode the appeal lies to the community and the general opinion (vv. 15, 39.) And this view of the poem falls in with the very early date assigned to it,—a date when the poet was at the lowest ebb of his fortunes, and saw nothing but despair; or, if he had just begun to recover himself, and congratulate himself on his personal escape and his return to Rome, he might shudder at a fresh outbreak of war, and the possible reversal of all hopes of public or private welfare. Walckenaer infers an early date for the poem, from the character of the poetry. He finds indications of a youthful unpractised author in the extent of details, the length and luxuriance of description. He allows, however, that 'le grand poëte s'y montre tout entier.' The metre chosen, a combination of hexameter and pure senarian iambic, has a stately harmony, suited to grave, earnest thoughts, and passing no less easily into a flow of happy aspirations. 'Cette ode dut plaire à ces âmes généreuses et douces qui, 'dans les maux de leur patrie, ne trouvent de distractions à leur tristesse que 'dans les rêves de la poésie et dans les fantaisies de l'imagination.' There is a fine paraphrase and application of the latter part of this Epode in the Rev. Isaac Williams' Christian Scholar.

1. Altera...ætas, "a second generation." Altera jam ætas inde a Sulla.' [O.]

2. Suis...viribus. 'Hoc est quod Titus Livius ait (in his Preface), 'ut magnitudine laboret sua.' V. Schol. This phrase means more than sua magnitudine, especially if compared with v. 9: it is equivalent to the line, C. III. VIII. 19,—'Infestus sibi luctuosis dissidet armis.' [O.] quotes Manil. I. 910; IV. 43. [M.] quotes Lucan, I. 3,—

'Populumque potentem
'In sua victrici conversum viscera dextra.

And Liv. XXX. 44,—'Magna civitas.....si foris hostem non habet, domi invenit: 'ut prævalida corpora...suis ipsa viribus onerantur.'

3. Quam neque, etc. Comp. Tacitus (Hist. III. 72) on the burning of the Capitol,—'Nullo externo hoste.....quam non Porsena dedita urbe, neque Galli capta, 'temerare potuissent, furore Principum exscindi.'

5. Æmula.....Capuæ, i.e. Capua which aspired to rivalry with Rome. Liv. XXIII. 1, sqq. (Arnold's Hist. ch. XLIV. p. 156.) It is called altera Roma in Cic. Phil. XII. 3. The name Capua is derived by Virgil from Capys, Æn.

x. 145. Livy (IV. 37) gives Vulturnum as the original name; deriving Capua 'vel ab duce eorum Capye, vel...a campestri agro.' Twiss' note makes Vulturnum the Latin equivalent of Capua, Capys being Tuscan for vultur, and the name being derived from some augury. If so, there is a resemblance to the legend of Rome.

6. "Faithless in times of revolution." The allusion is to the conduct of the Allobroges in and after the Catilinarian conspiracy.

7. Cærulea...pube. Tacit. Germ. 4,—'Omnibus (sc. Germanis) truces et cærulei 'oculi, rutilæ comæ, magna corpora.' Cp. Juv. XIII. 164. The allusion is to the Cimbric war of Marius.

8. Parentibus abominatus. Carm. I. I. 24. Hom. Il. ρ. 37,—ἀρητὸν δὲ τοκεῦσι γόον καὶ πένθος ἔθηκας. Comp. Virg. Æn. XI. 217.

10. Comp. Shakesp. Henry IV. Pt. 2, Act IV. Sc. IV,—'Thou wilt be a wilderness again, peopled with wolves, thy old inhabitants.'

12. Eques...ungula. See Heyne's note on Virg. Geor. III. 116,—'Equitem docuere 'sub armis Insultare solo.'

13. Carent, i. e. "are protected from," (in their tomb.)

15. This sentence is equivocal in construction. Orelli paraphrases thus,—'Quid 'adjumento sit ad carendum laboribus.' There is, perhaps, no other instance of expedio taking this usage and syntax; though, if we compare impedio, its exact opposite (which admits an infinitive and accusative, as in Ov. ex Pon. I. I. 21; and Cic. de Orat. I. 163,) there seems some analogy for it. [G.] explains carere as an infinitive, used, as in Greek, substantively; quoting 'adimam cantare,' E. II. v. 68. Bentley approves a conjectural reading,—'quod expediat,' taken parenthetically. Others have understood it thus,—'Quæritis c. quid expediat, aut m. p. quæritis carere. If this were admitted, it would be better to join the adverb with expediat;—"if you are seeking what may tend "to the general welfare, or, hopeless of that, are seeking for the better part a "refuge from calamity," etc. But the first explanation seems the most approved.

ib. Forte...quæritis, i. e. si forte, answered by sit. "If you ask...no resolve can be "better=let us resolve...to go."

ib. Quid expediat...carere, "what may help you to get free from."

ib. Communiter aut melior pars, as below, v. 36,—'omnis civitas aut pars.' "All, or the worthier part."

18. Exsecrata, "under a vow or curse." The history is given in Herod. I. 165.

24. Ratem occupare, i. e. "to embark at once."

27. Quando=siquando, implying no time. Cum, if used here, would imply a time when the thing would come to pass.

31. Subsidere, "to pair with." Cp. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 27,—'Jungentur jam gryphes 'equis.' And with v. 34 compare Archil. Fragm. 69, ('On the Eclipse.')

33. Ravos. 'Videtur expressisse Homericum. Od. λ. 611,—χαροποί τε λέοντες'. [O.] Cp. Liddell and Scott in voce. Ravus is specially applied to the eyes. Donaldson disputes this sense of χαροπός, in N. Cratylus, 282.

34. Levis. 'Factus instar piscis cum natura villosus sit.' [O.]

35. Hæc, cognate accus. after exsecrata. Cp. 'hæc ubi deflevit' ("when he had thus vented his grief,") Virg. Æn. XI. 59.

38. Perprimat=perpetuo premat.

41. Beata...arva. Virg. Æn. VI. 638,—

'Locos lætos, et amœna virecta,
'Fortunatorum nemorum sedesque beatas.'

Compare the conclusion of Milton's Comus,—

'To the Ocean now I fly,
'And those happy climes, that lie
'Where Day never shuts his eye.'

[O.] supposes this mention of the arva beata and this sentiment to be, as it were, taken from what Plutarch relates of Sertorius, § IX,—ἔρωτα θαυμαστὸν ἔσχεν οἰκῆσαι τὰς (Μακάρων) νήσους, κ. τ. λ.

44. Imputata, as inarata, "needing no cultivation." (Compare with this description generally, Virg. Ecl. IV.)

45. Numquam fallentis. Cp. Virg. Geo. II. 467,—'Nescia fallere vita' (which probably means not disappointing.)

ib. Termes. 'Dicitur extremus ramus olivæ, sicut vitium palmes.' V. Sch. ap. Gesn.

46. Suam, emphatic. Cp. 'non sua poma' (said of the grafted tree,) Virgil, Geo. II. 82.

48. Pede. Used of water, in Lucret. V. 273,—'Qua via secta semel liquido pede 'detulit undas;' a line imitated by Virg. Cul. 17,—'Liquido pede labitur unda.'

51. Cp. Virg. Geo. III. 537,—

'Non lupus insidias explorat ovilia circum,
'Nec gregibus nocturnus obambulat.'

ib. Vespertinus, i. e. vespere, as nocturnus in this quotation. There is the same usage in Sat. II. IV. 17. Virg. Æn. VIII. 465,—'Æneas se matutinus agebat.'

ib. Ursus. Cp. Ov. Met. VII. 546,—'Armentis incurrere fortibus ursi.'

54. Radat. The same verb is used of the dry cold north wind in Sat. II. VI. 25. The general description is modelled on Hom. Od. δ. 566,— οὐ νιφετὸς οὔτ' ἂρ χειμὼν πολὺς οὔτε ποτ' ὄμβρος, ἀλλ' αἰεὶ Ζεφύροιο λιγὺ πνείοντας ἀήτας ὠκεανὸς ἀνίησιν ἀναψύχειν ἀνθρώπους.

59. Huc...torserunt cornua, "have turned their sails hitherward." Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 549,—'Cornua velatarum obvertimus antennarum;' i. e. "we turn our sails seaward; we set sail." Cornua, "the tips of the sail-yards."

ib. Sidonii, i. e. "Phœnician mariners." Orelli compares the Homeric epithet Φοίνικες πολυπαίπαλοι ("crafty,") Odyss. ο. 419. The sense is (vv. 57-60,) "no vice nor toil reaches those happy shores."

CARM. XVII.—IN CANIDIAM.

A fresh satire upon Canidia, under the form of a submission and recantation.

1. Do manus, "I surrender." Orelli quotes Lucr. II. 1042,—'Dede manus, aut si falsum est accingere contra.' Cp. Ov. Trist. I. III. 8,—'Dedit victas utilitate manus,' (i. e. "she yielded to expediency.") This phrase is used in prose also, Cæsar, B. G. V. 31. "To give the hand" is a phrase found in the Old Test. E. V., as in Jer. I. 15.

5. Refixa cœlo. A phrase applied to shooting stars or meteors in Virg. Æn. V. 527.

7. Retro solve. Retro, if joined with solve, may be understood of the reverse action of the wheel, when the pulleys that whirl it are detached, or (which indeed is much the same thing) the undoing the charm. But it seems better to join it with citum, taken as a participle, not as an adjective. Then the construction will be='cie retro, ac solve,' i. e. "whirl it back, and let it rest." Citus is a participle in Ep. IX. 20; Lucret. I. 997; II. 85. Lambinus, to avoid joining retro, which implies motion, with solvo, a verb of rest, conjectured volve.

7. Turbinem, "the magic wheel," the ἴυγξ of Theocr. II. 17; also described there, in v. 30, as ῥόμβος χάλκεος.

8. Telephus, son of Hercules. See Ov. Rem. Am. 46,— 'Vulnus in Herculeo quæ quondam fecerat hoste,
'Vulneris auxilium Pelias hasta tulit.'

11. Unxere, i. e. they recovered his corpse. The ἀλείφειν λίπ' ἐλαίῳ, (Hom. Il. σ. 350) was one of the principal funeral ceremonies. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 219; Ov. F. IV. 853.

ib. Addictum, "given over; abandoned (in intention) to."

12. Homicidam. ἀνδροφόνοιο, Hom. Il. α. 242.

15. Exuere pellibus. See Hom. Odyss. κ. 393,— τῶν δ' ἐκ μὲν μελέων τρίχες ἔῤῥεον, κ.τ.λ.

ib. Pellibus. Pellis is the hide of animals, not the human skin, though satirically used for it in v. 22; as in Juvenal's description of old age (x. 192),—'deformem pro cute pellem.'

22. Ossa. Bentley reads ora, which would suit well with verecundus color, but not with pelle amicta. The sense is identical with that of Plautus, Capt. I. II. 25,— 'Macesco, consenesco, et tabesco miser,
'Ossa atque pellis sum miser macritudine.'
And so Theocr. II. 88,— καί μευ χρὼς μὲν ὅμοιος ἐγίνετο πόλλακι θάψω, ἔῤῥευν δ' ἐκ κεφαλᾶς πᾶσαι τρίχες, αὐτὰ δὲ λοιπὰ ὀστέ' ἔτ' ἦς καὶ δέρμα.

27. Negatum...credam, "I am forced to believe what I have always denied." The syntax accords with the rule, that credo and the like verbs have a dative of the person, an accusative of the thing, (e. g. in Ter. Ad. Act III. Sc. II. 330,—'Quid jam credas, aut cui credas?'). But it will be hard to find an instance parallel to this one. (The case of pronouns is different.)

28. Sabella. 'Sabella carmina pro Marsis posuit:' Schol.

ib. Increpare, "to sound or strike against:" here, "to touch (and overpower) the mind."

29. Marsa...nenia. Ov. A. A. II. 102,—'Mixtaque cum magicis nenia Marsa sonis.'

ib. Dissilire, i. e. "be racked to bursting."

30. Ter. Ad. 790,—'O cælum, O terra, O maria Neptuni!' The reading et terra is that of all the good MSS. Orelli's objection 'misere languet' does not, I think, apply to the double phrase, as it would to the Terentian line.

31. Quantum...Hercules. Cp. Soph. Trach. 840,— Νέσσου θ' ὕπο φόνια δολόμυθα κέντρ' ἐπιζέσαντα.
Cp. too the descriptive speech, vv. 1046—1106.

33. Virens. Explained by some as inextincta, and compared with Lucret. I. 899, 'flammai flore;' but by Orelli as expressing the colour of the sulphurous flame of the volcano,—'colore inter gilvum viridem et cæruleum medio.' Some MSS. have wrens, and a few furens, which is adopted and illustrated by Bentley.

36. Quod...stipendium, "what further fine or penalty will you impose?"

40. Here the poet proposes to deify the sorceress (stellis inserere, C. III. XXV. 6.) Then he appeals to her by the example of the Dioscuri: then, by ironical recantations, he charges her with low birth (v. 46), witchcraft (47), foul cruelty (49), and supposititious births.

ib. Voles sonari. Cp. (without the sarcasm) Ov. Am. I. X. 60,— .....'Celebrare puellas
'Dos mea; quam volui nota fit arte mea.'

42. Infamis Helenæ...vicem, "on account of the defamation of Helen." Vice is the general MS. reading. Orelli (after Bentley) adopts vicem, and confirms it, as the Latin usage, by a series of quotations. Bentley quotes Liv. VIII. 35,—'Tribunos suam jam vicem magis anxios.' Cp. 'An illius vicem doles?' (in Sulpicius' letter,) Cic. Fam. IV. 5.

44. Vati, i. e. Stesichorus. (The story is given in Plato, Phædrus, XLIV. p. 243, with a quotation from the παλινῳδία.) He was said to have satirised Helen; to have been struck blind by the Dioscuri; then, upon his recantation, to have been healed by them. In recanting, he is said to have invented or adopted the tale, that Helen was never carried to Troy, but only her εἴδωλον, according to the Egyptian legend of Herod. II. 118, and the Helena of Euripides.

Cp. Ov. A. A. III. 49,—'Probra Therapnææ qui dixerat ante maritæ, 'Mox cecinit laudes prosperiore lyra.'

47. So Ovid (Ep. VI. 89) describes Medea's sorceries,—
'Per tumulos errat.....
'Certaque de trepidis colligit ossa rogis.'

48. Novendialis, i. e. "recently buried." Servius, on Virg. Æn. V. 64, notes that anciently a dead man 'ad domum suam referebatur, et illic septem erat diebus, 'octavo incendebatur, nono sepeliebatur.' The number of nine days was held sacred with regard to the rites of sepulture. So in Virgil, l. c.; and Æn. V. 762. So in Ovid, Fast. V. 413,—
'Nona dies aderat, cum tu, justissime Chiron,
'Bis septem stellis corpora cinctus eras.'

Cp. vv. 439, 443, novies. So probably in Virg. Geor. IV. 544. Cicero mentions (ad Qu. Fr. III. 5) 'Novendialibus feriis.' The same number is found in other solemn ceremonies, as the expiatory 'Novendiale sacrum' in Liv. I. 31. So with the Greeks, τὰ ἔννατα; and, perhaps, the nine days of the Eleusinian mysteries has a connection with the same idea.

50. Tuusque venter, &c. "And Pactumeius is really your son; and the midwife "has true, not deceptive proofs of the birth, whenever you have become a "mother."

56. Ut, "What? Are you to deride with impunity," &c.? This elliptical use of ut occurs again, Sat. II. V. 18. So in Liv. IV. 2,—'Illine ut impune.....con-'citent.'

ib. Cotyttia, a Thracian festival, notorious for its licentiousness, in honour of a goddess Cotys or Cotytto.

58. "The priest or president of the witch rites on the Esquiline." An invidious term, substituted for "a witness of them," as he implies himself to have been in Sat. I. VIII. and for which he is reproached again, v. 77, by the epithet curiosus.

60. "What use would it be to me, to have feed the witches of the North (comp. v. 29,) and to have learnt their arts?"

62. Cp. Eur. Hipp. 1047,—ταχὺς γὰρ ἅδης ῥᾷστος ἀνδρὶ δυστυχεῖ. Comp. Southey's Kehama, C. 2,—'And thou shalt seek Death 'To relieve thee in vain,' &c.

65. Infidi. This is explained of Pelops' treachery to his charioteer Myrtilus (Eur. Or. 984.) Others read infidus, i. e. 'qui prodiderit commissa fide,' who had divulged the secrets of Jupiter. Eur. Or. 9,—ἀκόλαστον ἔσχε γλῶσσαν.

71. Pectus...recludere, Virg. Æn. X. 601.

76. Cereas imagines. Theocr. II. 28; Virg. Ecl. VIII. 80; Ov. Ep. VI. 91,— 'Devovet absentes simulacraque cerea figit,
'Et miserum tenues in jecur urget acus.'

'This process of witchcraft was imputed to the Duchess of Gloucester in Henry VIth's reign, as used against him. (Hume's England, ch. XX.)

79. Excitare, i.e. "reanimate." 'Tumulo prodire jubebitur umbra.' Ov. Rem. Am. 253.

81. Plorem...exitus, i. e. "shall my acts have no results or power upon you?"

Q. HORATI FLACCI SATIRAE.

LIBER PRIMUS.

SATIRE I.

The general subject is Covetousness, which (it is implied) originates in Discontent, and issues commonly in Avarice. These two principles or passions are treated of in order.

The question is proposed, and examples given, with a test (vv. 15–19) of the sincerity of grumblers. Then (vv. 28, 29), as to the hardships which are endured, they are so (at least professedly) in the hope of an eventual provision and repose. Not so with the miser. His toil has no end in prospect, and no present fruit (vv. 38—91.) The necessity for a truer principle of life is inferred (v. 92); its foundation in right reason asserted (vv. 106—7.) But the majority of men push on with the restless competition of a race (vv. 113–116.) Therefore it is that they cannot look back to life with satisfaction, nor to death with equanimity (vv. 117—119.)

1—3. Ut nemo...vivat, laudet...? i. e. 'ut nemo vivat (quisque) laudet.' Though the first clause contains the negative form of expression, the affirmative notion only is to be supplied to the second. So below, v. 109,—'Nemo se probet ac potius laudet.' The construction may be found sometimes in English; but it is due rather to accident than idiom, where it occurs. Sydney Smith, (Moral Phil. Lect. XI.) says,—'No one would laugh to see a little child fall, and would 'be shocked to see such an accident happen to an old man, or his father.' Elmsley has a note on it; see Soph. Œd. Tyr. 241, where the sentence begins with ἀπαυδῶ, and is continued with κελεύω understood. Cicero has a noted instance of this usage, de Orat. III. 14,—'Nemo extulit.....("no one extols a speaker for speaking intelligibly to his audience,") sed contempsit,' etc. ("but all despise one who cannot do so.") Also, pro Rosc. Com. 2,—'Adversaria in judicium protulit nemo; codicem protulit.' Cp. Liv. XXVI. 2,—'Ut nemo..... essent.' So Virg. Æn. I. 674,—

'Ne quo se numine mutet,
'Sed magno Æneæ mecum teneatur amore,' (i. e. 'ut teneatur.')

2. Ratio dederit ..fors objecerit. The correspondence of dederit with ratio (i. e. "Providence, or design,") and of objecerit with fors (i.e. "accident, or chance,") is to be marked: the first phrase may be held to represent the Stoic theory, and the second the Epicurean theory of the government of the world.

4. Mercatores, "traders, ship-owners." ἀνέρες ἀλφησταί. Hom.

4. Gravis annis. Cp. σὺν γήρᾳ βαρύς, Soph. Œd. T. 17; and Virg. Æn. IX. 246. Annis, it should be observed, is "years of service."

8. The idea is perhaps taken from the sentiment of Ajax, in Hom. Il. o. 511.

9. Juris legumque. A natural double phrase, used again in E. I. XVI. 41, to signify all law, abstract or general, and specific: jus expresses "common law, national law, natural rights;" lex is "a law, a statute." Cicero (de Legg. I. 6) defines lex as that which 'scripto sancit quod vult aut jubendo aut vetando.' Their various and distinctive meanings are given fully, and with instances, in Adam's Roman Antiquities, p. 181, sqq.

10. Galli cantum. τὸν ὄρθριον νόμον, Arist. Eccl. 741; Av. 489. ὄρνιχες τρίτον ἅρτι τὸν ἔσχατον ὄρθρον κέκδον, Theocr. Id. XXIV. 63.

ib. Consultor...pulsat. Cp. Cic. pro Murena, 9,—'Vigilas tu de nocte, ut tuis con-'sultoribus respondeas: ille ut eo, quo intendit, mature cum exercitu pervo-'niat; te gallorum, illum buccinarum cantus exsuscitat.'

11. Vadibus, from vas, "a surety;" one 'qui pro altero vadimonium promittebat,' Varro. Vadimonium, "a promise (in law,) or recognizance." Vadimonium sistit, "he keeps his recognizance," i. e. appears in court, Cic. pro P. Quint. 8. Vadm. mihi deserit, "he forfeits it," i. e. by not appearing, Ibid. 23. Vadari, "to hold (a person) to bail." See Sat. I. IX. 36.

13. Cetera de genere hoc. 'Transitus est Lucretianus IV. 590.' [O.]

14. Fabium, 'Eques Rom. Narbonensis,' a Stoic, fond of, and tiresome in, argument,—if we may trust the allusion here, and Sat. I. II. 134.

20. Quid causæ est...quin? ("What is there to prevent his being," i. e.) "must he not be provoked?" Quin, i. e. "to prevent," as in Sat. II. III. 42; A. P. 444; Ter. Andr. III. IV. 21.

21. Buccas inflet. A gesture indicative sometimes of pride and affectation, sometimes of anger. In the first sense compare τὰς γνάθους φυσῶν from Demosth. Fals. Leg. I. 314, and, in the second, 'tumido delitigat ore,' A. P. 94. [O.] cp. 'sufflatus' in Plaut. Bacch. IV. II. 21, and Casin. III. III. 19. So Persius, IV. 20,—'Suffla; sum candidus' (i. e. "boast.") So 'buccæ' is used of vehement declaimers, Juv. XI. 34; Pers. V. 13.

23. Præterea. Here a fresh argument is beginning; checked, however, by a parenthesis, to excuse diversion to a more serious vein and particular application.

ib. Jocularia, "farces"=exodia. See Liv. VII. 2, where the rise of farce and comedy at Rome is described; its first step, the addition of jocularia to the Tuscan dance; its transition to saturæ, with musical accompaniment; then a plot, dialogue, and scenic representation; while, as it assumed its most artificial shape, the young Romans, leaving the play to trained actors, claimed a place for, and performed, as amateurs, the old jocularia, then called exodia, (whether these were "interludes," as in Smith's Dict. and Sigonius' note, or "after-pieces.)"

29. Hic. Not as if the "publican" had been already mentioned, but in opposition to ille, v. 28. The caupo is more fittingly introduced among the examples here than the consultus, whose profession would not have been adopted merely for a livelihood.

ib. Nautæ, i. e. mercatores, as in v. 6.

32. Compare Juvenal, XIV. 272,—

'Hic tamen ancipiti figens vestigia planta,
'Victum illa mercede parat, brumamque famemque
'Illa reste cavet; tu propter mille talenta
'Et centum villas temerarius.'

33. Formica. Virg. Geor. I. 186; Æn. IV. 402,—

'Ingentèm formicæ farris acervum
'Cum populant hiemis memores,' etc.

So in Scripture, Proverbs, VI. 6. It has been denied that ants are granivorous: proof of their being so may be seen in Kirby and Spence, or Thomson's Land and the Book. Probably a difference is to be made between the species in cold and in warm climates.

36. Inversum. A favourite compound with Horace; perhaps here, as some suggest, borrowing its meaning from the 'inversa Aquarii urna.'

ib. Contristat. Virg. Geor. III. 279,—'Pluvio contristat frigore cœlum.'

ib. Aquarius. Ibid. 304,—'Extremoque irrorat Aquarius anno.' The sun is reckoned to enter Aquarius on the 16th of January.

37. Illis...quæsitis. It is not usual to find ille joined thus with a participle, like the article in Greek; but compare v. 115.

38. Cum te, the apodosis to quæ. "But she uses her store like a wise creature, whereas you....." Te, i. e. "the miser;" on whom the Satire is suddenly turned.

42. Defossa. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 507,—'Condit opes alius, defossoque incubat auro.'

45. Frumenti, i. e. "measures of corn." The modius, or "peck," a sixth of the Gr. μέδιμνος, was the common dry measure of the Romans.

ib. Triverit area. Tibul. I. v. 22; Virg. Geor. I. 192,—'Medio tostas æstu terit 'area fruges.'

46. Hoc...plus. 'Idem fere atque eo plus.' [O.]

50. Seneca, Ep. 16,—'Si ad naturam vives, numquam eris pauper; si ad opiniones, 'numquam eris dives.' It was an Epicurean maxim, τὸ μὲν φυσικὸν πᾶν εὐπόριστόν ἐστι, Diog. Laert. X. 130. Comp. the Stoic rule, 'Vivere naturæ con-'venienter,' E. I. IX. 12.

53. Cumera (or cumerum) was "a bin," sometimes of earthenware, oftener of wicker-work, for grain. Also it was a measure of five or six modii. Gesner calls it 'Punica et Syra vox a Gr. κάμπτρα.'

55. Comp. Spenser's F. Qu. II. VII. 15,—

'Thro' foul intemperance
'Frail men are oft captived to covetise:
'But would they think with how small allowance
'Untroubled nature doth herself suffice,
'Such superfluities they would despise,
'Which with sad cares impeach our native joys:
'At the well-head the purest streams arise,
'But mucky filth his branching arms annoys.'

58 60. See (for illustration of this) the Eastern story in the Rambler, No. 38; and Gray's Ode to Vicissitude, Stanz. 8.

61. Bona pars. Cp. 'bona magnaque pars,' Lucret. V. 1025. A phrase found in Terence also.

62. Tanti, quantum habeas, sis. Juvenal's lines, III. 140, with a different application, are parallel to this,—

'Protinus ad censum, de moribus ultima fiet
'Quæstio.....
'Quantum quisque sua nummorum servat in arca,
'Tantum habet et fidei.'

66. Sibilat. Cic. in Pison. §5,—'Da te populo, committe ludis; sibilum metuis?' Compare Ben Jonson, 'Every Man out of his Humour,' Act I,—

'Poor worms, they hiss at me, whilst I at home
'Can be contented to applaud myself.....with joy
'To see how plump my bags are and my barns.'

Juvenal expresses this in his own way, Sat. XIV. 152,—

'Sed qui sermones! quam fœdæ buccina famæ!
'Quid nocet hæc? inquit: Tunicam mihi malo lupini
'Quam si me toto laudet vicinia pago
'Exigui ruris paucissima farra secantem!'

Euripides has the contrary sentiment, Ion, 630,— οὐ φιλῶ ψόγους κλύειν ἐν χερσὶ σώζων ὄλβον.

67. Cp. Eur. Fr. Bell. XX. 7,— ὁ μὲν ζάπλουτος εἰς γένος δ' οὐκ εὐτυχὴς ἀλγεῖ μὲν, ἀλγεῖ, παγκάλως δ' ἀλγύνεται ὄλβου διοίγων θάλαμον ἥδιστον χερί.

68—71. Tantalus...inhians. ὥσπερ ὁ Τάνταλος...ἐπικεχηνότες μόνον τῷ χρυσίῳ. Lucian, Timon, 17.

71. Virg. Æn. VI. 610,—'Aut qui divitiis soli incubuere repertis,' (and cp. the citation on v. 42.)

73. Compare Pope, Mor. Essays, III. 79,—

'What Riches give us, let us then enquire?
'Meat, Fire, and Clothes. What more? Meat, Clothes, and Fire.
'Is this too little?'

ib. Quo, "to what end." Not often joined with such a verb as valeat. But cp. 'quo vellet aurum' (equivalent to 'quam ad rem sumeret,' C. 52) in Cic. pro Cæl. XXI. 53. Cp. also 'Si quo usus operæ sit,' Liv. XXVI. 9.

75. Quis...negatis. Cp. Cic. de Fin. II. 20,—'Cetera illa...quibus demptis negat 'se Epicurus intelligere quid sit bonum.'

76. Vigilare metu...juvat. Eur. Ion, 623,— τίς γὰρ μακάριος, τίς εὐτυχὴς, ὅστις δεδοικὼς καὶ παραβλέπων βίαν αἰῶνα τείνει;

On the difference of metus, etc. see Donaldson's Lat. Gr. App. IV. 109. Metus is a fear of what is future or distant; timor of what is near and immediate; formido a constant haunting dread; pavor agitation, whether excited by fear or hope; as in E. I. VI. 10.

77. Malos fures. This is thought to be a translation of κλῶπες κακοῦργοι, Herod. I. 41.

79. Cp. Goldsmith's Deserted Village,—'The heart distrusting, asks—if this be joy?' And Spenser's Faery Qu. II. VII. 12,—

'Far otherwise (said he) I riches read,
'And deem them root of all disquietness;
'First got with guile, and then preserved with dread.'

And see the allegorical description of Avarice in the same, B. I. IV. 27—29.

80. Cp. Eurip. Elect. 427,— σκοπῶ τὰ χρήμαθ' ὡς ἔχει μέγα σθένος ξένοις τε δοῦναι σῶμά τ' ἐς νόσον πεσὸν δαπάναισί σῶσαι.

82. Assideat. Cp. Liv. XXV. 24,—'assidentes curantesque.' So προσεδρία, Eur. Orest. 304.

88. At si...perdas, "but you must fail if you think to attach your relatives to you, "though naturally your friends; and to retain them in their attachment, with-"out labouring to deserve it." Compare Xen. Memor. I. II. 55,—ἐάν τε ὑπὸ πατρὸς, ἐάν τε ὑπὸ ἀδελφοῦ, ἐάν τε ὑπ' ἄλλου τινὸς βούληται τιμᾶσθαι, μὴ τῷ οἰκεῖος εἶναι πιστεύων, ἀμελῇ, ἀλλὰ πειρᾶται, ὑφ' ὧν ἂν βούληται, τιμᾶσθαι, τούτοις ὠφέλιμος εἶναι.

There is good authority for the reading adopted by Gesner, An si...? "Would you be losing your labour, if you endeavoured to retain (by meriting "it) the love of your kindred? Is that a hopeless task?"

91. In Campo, sc. Martio, i. e. as a racer. Cp. C. I. VIII. 8. Keightley suggests a possible allusion to the Equiria, instituted by Romulus, and mentioned in Ovid, Fast. II. 859; III. 519.

92. Denique sit finis, "in fine, let a definite limit be set to your pursuit of wealth." Observe how this verse connects itself with vv. 106–7: "Such a limit is a "principle in nature, and the neglect of it is inconsistent with rectitude."

ib. Cumque habeas plus, "since you have more than before;" as parto quod avebas, "having obtained your original desire," i. e. a competency.

96. Ut metiretur. This phrase was proverbial, to signify "great riches" (or, according to Suidas, v. μέδιμνος, "great expectations.") So Xenophon, Hell. III. II. 27, expresses the wealth of Xenias of Elis, τὸν λεγόμενον μεδίμνῳ ἀπομετρήσασθαι τὸ παρὰ τοῦ πατρὸς ἀργύριον. Pliny, N. H. XXXV. 36, relates that Apelles was paid for his Alexander 20 talents, mensura non numero.

100. Fortissima Tyndaridarum, i. e. "like a Clytemnestra."

102. L. Cassius Nomentanus, proverbial with Horace for his extravagance. Sat. I. VIII. 11; II. I. 22.

ib. Pergis, etc. The sense is,—"That is quite another point: you argue as if the "alternative lay between extremes; you bring contraries together front to "front." Componere is a metaphor from the gladiatorial school; see Sat. I. VII. 20. [O.] Frontibus adversis might be a metaphor from a bull fight, as Virg. Æn. XII. 717,—

'Cum duo conversis inimica in prœlia tauri
'Frontibus incurrunt;'

but simply expresses direct opposition, as in Lucret. VI. 117,—'Concurrere nubes frontibus adversis possint.'

104. Vappam...ac nebulonem. Vappa was properly "wine;" or rather "vinegar," which had lost all its acid and taste. Nebulo is from nebula, "mist, cloud." They describe, therefore, a wasteful and worthless character.

105. This is said by the Scholiast to be a Greek proverb.

108. "I come back to my first point, viz. that men in their covetousness are never contented." Illuc unde abii redeo is a phrase of Plautus, Menæch. Prol. 56.

ib. Nemo ut, i. e. ut nemo: 'Pro accus. cum infinitivo, ut Sat. I. III. 115,' Orelli. The construction is apparently repeated from his first sentence (v. 1),—'Fit.... ut nemo contentus vivat.' Nemon' ut...? is the reading of many MSS. and Editions, but has all the appearance of being a mere correction, and the interrogative construction is out of place in a summary of reasonings.

110. Cp. Ov. A. A. I. 350,—'Vicinumque pecus grandius uber habet.'

114. Ut cum carceribus. Cp. Virg. Geor. I. 512; Ov. A. Am. III. 595,— 'Tum bene fortis equus reserato carcere currit,

'Cum quos prætereat, quosque sequatur habet.'

The carceres were the inclosed vaults or stalls, in which chariots and horses were ranged, for starting in the race. They (or their doors) are called 'spatiis obstantia claustra' in Epist. I. XIV. 9.

119. Lucret. III. 951,—'Cur non, ut plenus vitæ conviva, recedis?' and 970–973. Cp. the use of this figure in Sir W. Scott's Anne of Geierstein, ch. XV,—'Death, 'is dreadful...but in the first spring-tide of youth...to be snatched forcibly from 'the banquet to which the individual has but just sat down, is peculiarly 'appalling.'

120. Crispini, a butt for Horace's satire, apparently a Stoic. Sat. I. III. 138.

ib. Scrinia, "writing desk or case." Spenser has the word 'scryne,' derived from it.

SATIRE II.

A satire upon those who run into one extreme to avoid another, as expressed in v. 24,—'Dum vitant stulti vitia, in contraria currunt.' There is the indiscriminate liberality, out of which strollers and quacks make their harvest (vv. 1—4): opposed to this is the parsimony that will refuse help even to a starving friend (vv. 4—6): a third (hunc, v. 7) lavishes his fortune upon luxurious entertainments. Fufidius (vv. 12—22) is an usurer, extreme in his exactions and his wealth, and no less so in the penury of his living. So, in matters of dress or foppery, nil medium est, v. 28. The rest of the Satire is taken up with scandalous anecdote; so as to involve the moral, however, that lawless habits omni parte laborent (v. 39.)

1. Ambubaiarum, "Syrian musicians" (cp. Juv. III. 62), named from their musical instrument, ambuba.
2. Balatrones. Lucret. III. 954. See Bentley on S. II. III. 166.
3. Tigelli. To be distinguished from Hermogenes Tigellius, who is mentioned, Sat. I. III. 129, as then alive.
7. Compare Pope, Moral Essays, III. 197, sq.
8. Ingrata, "insatiable." Cp. Lucr. III. 1016. Stringat, i. e., "strips bare."
ib. Ingluvie, "gluttony;" properly, "a bird's crop," as in Virg. G. III. 431.
9. Conductis, "borrowed." Cp. Juv. XI. 46, 'conducta pecunia.'
14. Quinas...capiti mercedes exsecat. A description of excessive usury. Caput, "the principal;" merces, "the interest." The old rate of interest established by the XII. Tables was a yearly one, unciarium fenus=one-twelfth of the sum borrowed, or 8⅓ per cent. But, in later times, interest was paid every month, and, in calculating it, the rate was expressed by the as and its divisions. Thus, asses usuræ signified 12 per cent., being 1 as per month: deunces usuræ=11 per cent.: unciæ usuræ (uncia being the 12th of an as) signified 1 per cent. Instead of asses usuræ, the phrase centesimæ usuræ was often used, because, at this rate, in 100 months a sum equal to the principal was paid up. And thus binæ centesimæ usuræ was 24 per cent.; and in this passage quinas is equivalent to quinas centesimas, or 60 per cent.
16. Nomina, i. e. "bonds, or bills."
18. At in se..."but of course he spends liberally in proportion...Not so," etc.
20. Terenti fabula. The Heautontimorumenos. Cp. Act III. Sc. I. 31, with v. 24, 'dum vitant,' etc.
25. Maltinus. This is a name derived from malta, a Lucilian term for an effeminate person. The Scholiasts affirm that under this name Mæcenas is intended, and that these tunicæ demissiciæ, which were generally a sign of a foppish and luxurious habit, were adopted by him to hide varicose veins. Kirchner (Quæst. Hor. III.) adopts this statement of the Scholiasts, and infers from it that this Satire must have been composed some time before the poet had become known to his patron. Orelli quotes Madvig as decisive against it; but Franke and Weber as, amongst others, supporting it. (See the Philological Museum, vol. I. pp. 474-9.)
36. Albi, i. e. 'matronæ veste alba indutæ,' [O.]
59. Trahit=his reputation suffers more than his estate.
62. Oblimare. Prop. limo obruere, as in Virg. Geor. III. 136, 'sulcos oblimet inertes.'
63. Togata, a term of reproach. The toga was worn by low characters: the proper dress of a lady was stola.

76. Tuo vitio, i. e. it is an additional pang to have yourself to blame.

89. See Virg. Geor. III. 79.

98. Ciniflones=cinerarii (Catull. LXI. 138), or, a calamistro, "hair-curlers."

105. Taken from Callimachus, Epigram 32.

108. Theocr. Idyll. XI. 108,—τὰν παρεοῖσαν ἄμελγε, τί τὸν φεύγοντα διώκεις. Cp. Eur. Hipp. 185.

123. Ut neque, etc. In the allegory of Prodicus, Xen. Mem. II. I. 22, this is the description of Vice,—κεκαλλωπισμένην τὸ μὲν χρῶμα ὥστε λευκοτέραν τε καὶ ἐρυθροτέραν τοῦ ὄντος δοκεῖν φαίνεσθαι, τὸ δὲ σχῆμα ὥστε δοκεῖν ὀρθοτέραν τῆς φύσεως εἶναι.

131. Hæc, sc. conscia, "the confidante," as in S. II. VII. 60. Deprensa, sc. mulier.

SATIRE III.

The subject here seems to be the rule vitiis nemo sine (as in v. 68.), and the deductions from it; e. g. that the observation of faults in others should remind us of our own; that the best construction should be put upon each other's actions; and that censures, where there is call for them, should be modified and discriminating.

The method pursued is a notice of the levities and inconsistencies of Tigellius—a confession of the satirist's own defects,—for which he claims a fair and kind consideration, and then argues against the unfriendly and censorious habit prevalent in society, and finally against the arbitrary Stoic rule, which classed all offences as equal,—a rule in its practical application unnatural and inequitable.

3. Sardus...ille Tigellius. The Scholiast quotes a satiric verse (a scazon Iambic) upon him,—'Sardi Tigelli putidum caput venit.' See Cic. ad Fam. VII. 24. (The proverb Sardi venales dates from B. C. 176, when Sardinia was subdued by T. S. Gracchus.) He is spoken of in the last Sat. v. 3, as recently dead. Observe the imperf. habebat in this sense.

ib. Ille, 'quasi de noto,' Schol.

4. Qui...posset, "who might have," not "who might."

5 Patris, i. e. "his adopted father;" Julius Cæsar.

6. Collibuisset, compound of libet, used by Cic. N. D. I. 38; ad Fam. XV. 16; with a nom. case, by Sallust, Cat. 51.

ib. Ab ovo...ad mala, "from the beginning to the end of dinner. "Integram famem ad ovum affero,' Cic. ad Fam. IX. 20. Mala and bellaria ("fruits and confectionery") were brought in at dessert. (See Becker's Gallus, Exc. I.)

7. Citaret, "run over rapidly or repeatedly." Lachmann explains it by compellare, as in Cic. Fin. II. 18; or celeri ἀγωγῇ peragere. Cp. Cic. de Orat. I. LIX. 251,—'Pæanem aut Nomionem citarimus.'

ib. Io Bacche. The beginning or burden of a song. Ἰόβακχοι is a Greek compound for "drinking songs." Cp. Βακχέβακχον ᾄσαι, Arist. Equit. We may compare too Io Pæan in Ov. A. A. II. 1, and Io Triumphe, C. IV. II. 50. But there is great doubt whether this reading is genuine. Lachmann (on Lucr. II. 27) utterly condemns it, on the score of prosody: he decides for Io Bachæ. Cp. Eur. Bacch. 577,—ὦ βάκχαι, ἰὼ βάκχαι. No doubt the chief MSS. have Bacche; but their testimony is not decisive; it is so common with them to put e for æ: rather, as some good copies certainly write Bacchæ, their authority seems greater than the negative testimony of the majority.

7. Modo summa...modo...ima, i. e. "running from the lowest to the highest key of the gamut." 'Voce modo (hac quæ resonat) summa, modo hac quæ resonat ima chord. quat.' Summa chorda (ὑπάτη), "the uppermost string" (the bass) of the tetrachord. Ima, "the lowermost (νεάτη or νήτη) string" (the treble, or highest note). Gesner says,—'Trajectio locum aliquantum 'obscurat, ut in C. II. XIII. 1. Non jungendum summa voce, sed summa 'chorda.'

8. Resonat...chordis='e chordis prodit, per chordas sonat, ablativus causalis vel instrumentalis.' [O.]

9. Velut qui...fugiens, i. e. currebat velut qui fugeret. Cp. the construction in S. I. VIII. 32,—'Stabat ut quæ peritura'=peritura esset.

10. Qui...sacra ferret, like the κανήφοροι, "solemn and slow." Cp. Sat. II. VIII. 13, and Cic. de Off. I. XXXVI. 7,—'pomparum ferculis similes,' (resembling puppets in a procession.) So S. II. VIII. 14.

12. Reges...loquens. So Cic. ad Att. IX. 2, 3,—'Nihil nisi classes loquens et exercitus.' So Plato Gorg. V. 101,—λέγειν σκυτέας καὶ κναφέας.

15. Decies centena, "a million of sesterces."

17. Noctes vigilabat, etc. Cp. Xen. Mem. II. I. 30, (in Prodicus' Allegory of Vice),—τῆς μὲν νυκτὸς ὑβρίζουσα, τῆς δὲ ἡμέρας τὸ χρησιμώτατον κατακοιμίζουσα.

20. Immo alia et..."yes I have, but they are different, and perhaps (I may say, or "hope) less. I am not, like M., censorious to others, ignorant or careless of "my own faults."

21. Absentem, i. e. "behind his back."

22. Date....verba, ("to give words and nothing else;" then) "to impose upon."

25. Pervideas. Bentley reads prævideas, as=prætervideas, but adduces no instance of the word bearing that sense: it means "to foresee." Pervideas lippus is like S. I. II. 91,—'Hypsæa cœcior.....spectes.'

ib. Oculis...lippus inunctis. Cp. Ep. I. I. 29. "When you look blindly into (i. e. "overlook) your own faults, why, in the case of your friends, are you so "sharp-sighted?"

ib. Serpens Epidaurius. Epidaurus was famous for the worship of Æsculapius, and for its sacred serpents. The worship was introduced at Rome B C. 293, on occasion of a pestilence, when, as the legend ran, a serpent, indicating the presence or favour of the divinity, appeared to the commissioners, and was conveyed by them to Rome. (See the full relation in Arnold's Hist. R. vol. II. ch. XXXIV. p. 396); and Ov. Met. XV. 624, sqq.

29. Iracundior, "rather quick-tempered." It has been said that the poet Virgil was aimed at in these remarks; but, if they have any particular reference, it is more likely that Horace thought of himself.

ib. Minus aptus, "not polished enough to please the nice (and exact) taste of men now-a-days." So Orelli. Some join the two clauses: "He is touchy, and "cannot stand their keen wit."

30. Rideri possit, etc. Juv. III. 147, sqq.

31. Rusticius, "because his hair is trimmed awkwardly, and his dress slovenly." Cp., in the opposite sense, facetus, Sat. I. II. 26.

ib. Male laxus...calceus. Aristoph. Equit. 320.

37. "For faults spring up like weeds in a neglected soil." (Wagner reads felicem, not filicem, in Virg. Geor. II. 189.)

58. Tardo. So Cicero, Acad. IV. 97,—'Vide quam sit cautus is quem isti tardum vocant.'

59. "Another guards against any imputations, since he is aware of his liability to "unfair aspersions on his character."

63. Simplicior quis et est, i. e. et talis est qualem. (Some construe et as=etiam with simplicior.)

66. Communi sensu, "a perception of the wants and wishes of others," nearly ="tact." Seneca, de Benef. I. 12, defines it thus: 'Sit in beneficio sensus 'communis; tempus locum personas observet.' Cic de Orat. II. XVI. (68), has 'sensu hominum communi.' [G.] quotes Juv. VIII. 73,—

'Rarus enim ferme sensus communis in illa
'Fortuna;'

(where see Mayor's note.) Communis is used of persons, as by Cicero (de Senect. 17) of Cyrus,—'Communem erga Lysandrum atque humanum fuisse,' i. e. "condescending and kind;" κοινὸν καὶ φιλάνθρωπον, Demosth. de Cor. p. 315, ult. So Suetonius, Claud. 21, communior (="more familiar;") and Vespas. 22,—'super cenam.....communissimus.'

68. Compare the analogous argument relating to men's wants and the provision of nature, in Herod I. 32,—ἄλλο μὲν ἔχει ἑτέρου δὲ ἐπιδέεται· ἢ δὲ (sc. χώρα) ἂν τὰ πλεῖστα ἔχῃ, ἀρίστη αὕτη.

70. Cum is taken by all Comm. (following the Scholiast) as a preposition, governing vitiis. "Let him weigh my good against my bad qualities, and let him "give the preponderance to the former. I will do the same by him." Singular as this construction is, the general argument seems clearly to confirm it. The preceding context has been a continuous reproach against the uncharitable temper of society; it has nowhere been supposed that men form dispassionate, impartial judgments of each other. But now it is urged that a real friend, a friend deserving of the name, would do so. "Let my friend (says the moralist)" weigh my good against my evil qualities; if the good out-"number the other, let him give them the preponderance." [O.] properly insists on the true usage of compenso. Compensare rem cum re is, "to compare by weighing together," (pensando comparare); compensare rem re, "to make up for, to compensate, by weighing," (adpensando reparare).

71. Inclinet, "lean to," depress the balance in favour of. 'Mire pro propensior sit.' [G.] The meaning belongs naturally enough to the verb (cp. Cic. de Or. XLIV. 187,—'Si se dant et...sua sponte, quo impellimus, inclinant atque propendent,') the dative following it is, to say the least, very rare. Inclinare is used both as a transitive and a neuter verb: there would be no difficulty here in understanding an ellipse of animum or se, as in the above quotation of Cicero. We might even supply lancem, considering how fully the metaphor is kept up: in that case, pluribus would be ablative,—inclinet lancem pluribus= "press down the scale with these as more numerous."

72. Si volet...ponetur. The correspondence of tenses is not a grammatical necessity, but it furnishes some argument at least for connecting these two verbs as antithetical. Orelli has a comma after inclinet, and a colon after volet.

ib. Trutina, the cavity, in which the tongue (examen) of the balance plays. See Persius, v. 5.

73. See the New Test. S. Matt. VII.

76. Iræ. This is a genitive of apposition. In this usage the leading noun expresses a general idea; the genitive a special one, to denote or define it. (See Madv. Gr. § 286.) There is a parallel instance in Cic. pro Muren. x. 23,—'Aliis 'ego te virtutibus, continentiæ, gravitatis, justitiæ, fidei, ceteris omnibus, 'consulatu et omni honore semper dignissimum judicavi.' This genitive is used poetically in local or geographical terms, e. g. urbem Patavi, Mycenæ, Buthroti, in Æn. I. 247; V. 52; III. 293; tellus Ausoniæ, III. 477: and in descriptive terms, as in Liv. XXIV. 3,—'Lucus...proceris abietis arboribus septus.' (Arborem fici, in Cic. pro Flacc. 17—41, is probably an interpolation). So in Suet. Aug. 94, arborem palmæ.

82. Labeone, M. Antistius Labeo, afterwards a distinguished jurist. At this time he was very young: he gave offence to Augustus; and Walckenaer suggests that this satiric mention might have been intended to shield him from a real hostility.

83. Dicatur. The Delphin Ed. points this clause interrogatively.

85. Observe the variation from oui concedere, in S. I. IV. 140.

88. Mercedem. See note on Sat. I. II. 14. Cp. 'Debitor usuram ("interest") pariter sortemque ("principal") negabit.' Mart. V. XLII.

91. Evandri manibus tritum, i. e. "a curiosity as old as the time of Evander." This must be the Arcadian Evander of Æneid, VIII. 52, sqq. The Scholiast supposes the sculptor to be meant, Aulanius Evander (Plin. N. H. XXXVI. v. 32), who was brought by Antony from Athens to Alexandria, and thence (in 29 B. C., and therefore subsequently to the date of this Book of Satires) to Rome. Tritum. [O.] quotes Martial, VIII. VI. 9 (upon the passion for antiques),—

'Hi duo longævo censentur Nestore fundi;
'Pollice de Pylio trita columba nitet.'

92. Cp. Lucian, Timon, 54.

96. This was the Stoic doctrine. Cp. Cic. de Fin. IV. XIX. 55,—'Recte facta 'omnia æqualia, omnia peccata paria; quæ cum magnifice primo dici viderentur 'considerata minus probantur: sensus enim cujusque et natura rerum atque ipsa 'veritas clamabat quodammodo, non posse adduci ut inter eas res, quas Zeno 'exæquaret, nihil interesset.'

So C. I. X. 3 represents speech and language as the beginning of civilisation. Cp. again Cic. Tusc. Qu. V. II. 5,—'O vitæ Philosophia dux...tu urbes 'peperisti, tu dissipatos homines in societatem vitæ convocasti, tu eos inter se 'primo domiciliis, deinde conjugiis, cum litterarum et vocum communione 'junxisti, tu inventrix legum, etc.'

105. So Juven. XV. 148—154.

115. Ut peccet. Peccare would be equally good Latin. After words expressing a consequence (in argument), a deduction, or a proof, either mood (infin. or subj.) is admissible. 'Concedis ut virtus...efficiat,' Cic. de Fin. V. 26. The two forms of phrase might be thus construed: "Reason can never prove that "he is guilty" (peccare): or, "Reason can never so far carry its point, that he "will be (found) guilty" (ut peccet.)

117. Sacra...legerit. Hence the Engl. "sacrilege."

120. Ut ferula cædas, "for, as to your punishing lightly what deserves severity, this "I do not fear." Ordinarily, vereor ut cædas is "I fear you will punish" (the sense required); vereor ne cædas, "I fear you will not...;" but here non vereor is, in a manner, disconnected from the first clause, which thus becomes purely explanatory, not dependent: 'Ut cædas, id equidem non vereor,' instead of 'id ne facias non vereor.' A parallel anacoluthon is quoted by Orelli and by Madvig, Opusc. V. I. p. 491, note, from Liv. XXVIII. XXII. 12,—'Nihil minus quam 'ut egredi mœnibus auderent timori poterat.' Madv. says,—'Debebat scribi 'ne, rectum esset ut, si subjecisset futurum credebatur.'

125. Cp. Cic. Acad. II. XLIV. 136; and Lucilius (quoted by the Scholiast),—

'In mundo sapiens hæc omnia habebit;

127. Chrysippus, born at Soli in Cilicia, 280 B.C. He succeeded Cleanthes, the successor of Zeno, in the Stoic school. He appears to have based their system on more plausible arguments, and to have made it more known and popular, than his predecessors. Cicero calls him 'homo sine dubio versutus et callidus' (N. D. III. 10.), and 'in omni historia curiosus,' (Tusc. D. I. 45.) A Greek saying is preserved,—εἰ μὴ γὰρ ἦν Χρύσιππος οὐκ ἂν ἦν Στοά.

SATIRE IV.

THIS contains the poet's defence of himself and his poetry against detraction.

In the opening he describes the rise of Roman satire (vv. 1—14), ridicules Crispinus and the reciters of the day, and claims not to be confounded with them (vv. 14—24.)

He rates his own pretensions modestly, and glances at the character of a true poet (v. 39, sqq.)

He justifies candid and friendly raillery (vv. 68—91,) as contrasted with selfish and ill-natured wit (v. 81, sqq.; v. 100.)

Then, paying a tribute to his father's excellence (v. 105,) who ever deterred him from vice and folly by example (the true purpose, with regard to the public, of legitimate satire), and inculcating by his own practice a habit of reflectiveness and self-correction, he skilfully recurs (v. 140) to his original subject, and winds up with the assertion and maintenance of poets' rights.

2. Comœdia prisca. Cp. Ars Poet. 281. The rise of Comedy was later, by a generation, than that of Tragedy. There were three divisions of it, marked by the refinements successively introduced by taste or by public opinion: The Old Comedy, which, in its unrestricted license, dealt with real persons and facts: 2. The Middle Comedy, in which the facts were real, but the names fictitious: 3. The New Comedy, in which both facts and names were fictitious. The distinction of Old and New is marked by Aristotle, Eth. N. IV. 14,—ἴδοι δ' ἄν τις καὶ ἐκ τῶν κωμωδιῶν τῶν παλαιῶν καὶ τῶν καινῶν· τοῖς μὲν γὰρ ἦν γελοῖον ἡ αἰσχρολογία ("personal abuse,") τοῖς δὲ μᾶλλον ἡ ὑπόνοια ("witty idea.") 94. Petilli. Cp. Sat. I. X. 26. He was said to have stolen the crown from the statue of Jupiter in the Capitol, and to have been acquitted only through the influence of Augustus. Hence the name Capitolinus. This was, however, a regular surname of the gens Petillia.

SATIRE V.

THIS satire is a humorous relation of a journey to Brundisium, in which Horace had been invited to accompany Mæcenas, who was employed on a state embassy.

The poet is said to have had for his model a similar satire of Lucilius, fragments of which are extant, the following verses among others:

'Verum hæc ludus ibi susque omnia deque fuerunt,
'Susque et deque fuere, inquam, omnia ludu' jocusque;
'Illud opus durum, ut Setinum accessimu' finem;
'Αἰγίλιποι montes, Ætnæ omnes, asperi Athones.'

To what legation and period 'the Journey' belongs, has been a vexata quæstio. It has been commonly referred to the convention and treaty of B. C. 40, at Brundisium. It has also been referred to B. C. 38, when Antony came to Brundisium to meet Augustus. But it is with most reason referred to the peace of Tarentum, B. C. 37.

After the war of Perusia (which closed with the sack of the town, in the beginning of the year 40, B. C.) there was still danger indicated of an outbreak between the triumvirs, and of another civil war. But an accommodation, in part helped forward by the death of Fulvia, was arrived at, and the treaty of Brundisium negotiated, by Mæcenas, Pollio, and Cocceius. (See Merivale, Hist. ch. XXVII. p. 229, sqq.) The interest attaching to this peace, the longing for it at Rome, and the joy felt when it seemed completed by the treaty of Misenum with S. Pompey in the next year, are supposed to find expression in Virgil's Fourth Eclogue. (See Merivale, pp. 232, 243. 8vo. ed.) Sextus, however, unable to enforce his claims on Achaia, refused to fulfil his stipulations. War again broke out. Octavian renewed through Mæcenas his negotiations with Antony, now in Athens, who promised to act with him. But when he appeared off Brundisium with his fleet, he was forbidden to land. A fresh mediation was needed, and resulted in what is called the treaty of Tarentum, B. C. 37 (Merivale, p. 249); when a scheme of joint action was concerted, and a renewal of the triumvirate for five years engaged for.

For determining the date of the Iter Brundisinum, it is to be observed that this Satire gives no assistance; it affirms nothing beyond the importance of the interests at stake (v. 28); and that the mission was not the first of its kind (v. 29,) and, incidentally, that it was undertaken in the spring of the year. (This is inferred from the mention of the "frogs' concert" in v. 14.) On a first view it was natural to connect the occasion of it with the negotiations of B. C. 40, considering the express mention of Brundisium, and the notoriety and importance of that convention. Accordingly, many commentators (and with them E. H. B. in the recent Dictionary of Geography, art. 'Brundisium') assign this date to the Iter. But there is evidence, negative and positive, to show that Horace did not enjoy the patronage of Mæcenas so early. Negative, because, from the battle of Philippi, fought in October or November, B. C. 42, there could be only about fifteen months down to the period in question. Nearly a year elapsed between the first acquaintance and the subsequent intimacy (nono mense, Sat. I. VI. 61), and so less than half a year would be allowed for the poet's return with the defeated fugitives to Rome, for his settling there, gaining his post of employment, and a favourable mention. The positive evidence is, that in Sat. II. VI. 40 (the date of which is restrained, by the circumstances mentioned in vv. 38, 53, and 56, to the year 30 or the end of 31, B. C.) it is affirmed that his familiarity with Mæcenas (suorum in numero) had commenced less than eight years before, i. e. in 38 B. C. or 39, at the earliest.

Kirchner (Quæst. Horat.) gives a full review of the circumstances, and argues strongly for connecting the Iter with the treaty of Tarentum. The difficulty is why Brundisium should be mentioned as the end of the journey, rather than Tarentum. The solution of the difficulty is no doubt conjectural; but it is to be borne in mind that the Satire is not an explanatory one, nor does it touch on public affairs. Thus, while possibly Brundisium (off which Antony's fleet had arrived) was the intended terminus, Horace, not being a political friend but merely an amusing companion, may well have been left behind when the place of meeting was altered, while his patron went forward to meet Octavian. If he went on to Tarentum (as Walckenaer, with a reference to Carm. II. 6, supposes him to have done,) political reserve might be a sufficient reason for his silence on the subject. The opportunity for humorous description must have ended with the arrival at Brundisium.

For the topographical details, Walckenaer, livr. IV. c. 7, may be consulted, and Gibbon's Essay, where he examines this journey, and that of Cicero into Cilicia, as illustrative examples of Roman travelling. I have set down the distances according to Orelli's computation, with Gibbon's variations. The time occupied is not distinctly expressed in the Satire: Orelli makes it out as seventeen days, Gibbon as twelve, Walckenaer as fourteen. The distance is reckoned by the first as 314 miles, two days being omitted; by Gibbon as 369; by Walckenaer as 378 Roman miles.

11. The travellers had now arrived at the Fossa Augusti, a canal, called also Decennovium, from its length of nineteen Roman miles; running parallel with the Appian Way.

12. Huc appelle, "come alongside here." Gr. παραβαλοῦ, or τὴν ἄκατον παραβάλλου, as in Ar. Ran. 180; Equ. 762.

ib. Trecentos. Sevenți is the most common term for an indefinite number; here it is halved: in Sat. I. III. 61 it is doubled. Compare Carm. III. IV. 79; Plaut. Aulul. III. V. 44.

16. Viator. 'Nauta in navi, viator qui mulam ducebat.' Schol. But this does not accord with v. 19, from which it seems clear that nauta is the "conductor," and therefore that viator must be some country passenger.

38. Murena. See Carm. II. 10. His sister was married to Mæcenas.

40. Plotius. M. Pl. Tucca, the same who with Varius had the editing of the Æneid. These names occur again together Sat. I. X. 81.

ib. Sinuessæ. Now Rocca di Mondragone, eighteen miles from Formiæ.

43. Complexus. Cp. 'Illum complexi ut mos amicorum est,' Cic. Ac. Q., in Proœmio.

45. Campano ponti. Three miles further, according to Orelli, (nine according to Walck.; eighteen, Gibbon.)

46. Parochi, public officers appointed to supply Roman magistrates with necessaries on their journey. See Cic. ad Attic. V. 16. L. Postumius Albinus, Cos. 173 B. C., is mentioned by Livy (XLII. 1,) as the first who put the allies of Rome to great expense on this account.

47. Capuæ Twenty-two miles further, [O.] (seventeen, Walck.; sixteen, Gibbon.)

ib. Tempore, i. e. "we reach Capua early in the day."

50. Cocceii...villa. Twenty-one miles from Capua.

52. Sarmenti. An account of this scurra is given by the Scholiast on Juv. V. 3. He had belonged to M. Favonius, slain in the proscription, and whose widow is supposed to be referred to in v. 55. He was freed by Mæcenas, and obtained a Scriptus quæstorius. Afterwards he fell into poverty. The following epigram is quoted by the Schol., and given in Burmann's Anthol. lib. II. 127,—

'Aliud scriptum habet Sarmentus, aliud populus volnerat:
'Digna dignis: sic Sarmentus habeat crassas compedes:
'Rustici, ne nihil agatis, aliquis sarmentum alliget.'

(In this there is a play on scriptus, "a clerkship," and scriptum, "a stigma;" and Sarmentus and sarmentum, "a faggot.") A Sarmentus is mentioned by Plutarch, in Life of Antony, as a favourite of Augustus. Walckenaer (vol. I. p. 220) supposes him to be the same.

ib. Scurræ. Cp. εἰσῆεσαν δὲ καὶ γελωτοποιοί, in the Thracian entertainment of Xen. Anab. VII. III. 33.

52. Messi, Cicirrhi. Messius, a buffoon, with the nickname of Cicirrhus (Gr. κίκιρρος, κίκκος), "a cock."

58. Accipio. So Soph. El. 668,—ἐδεξάμην τὸ ῥηθέν.

ib. Caput et movet, i. e. "he suits the action to the word." Cp. Juv. XII. 6,—'frontemque coruscat.'

60. At (=scilicet), used here as a particle of explanation.

62. Campanum in morbum, a kind of wart, or excrescence, common in Campania. The cicatrix of v. 60 remained from its excision.

64. Larva. Here="a mask," ('personæ pallentis hiatus,' Juv. III. 175). Gr. μορμολύκειον. Derived apparently from Lar. 'It appears from the word Larva, that the Lar was represented as a wide-mouthed figure.' Varron. p. 180.

65. Donasset...catenam. Catenam (like fugisset, v. 68.) implies a sharp taunt; for the imputation of 'fuga' made a slave out worthless. It is incidentally implied here, that one of the causes of it was likely to be starvation. Donare catenam is a phrase parodied from the bullam Laribus donare of children, when they grew up.

68. Una farris libra. The ordinary slave allowance was four or five pecks (modii) of corn a month. It was given out on the Kalends, as we learn from Plaut. Stichus, 60,—'Meministis quotkalendis petere demensum cibum.' This, at 24 libræ to the modius, would give between 3 and 4 pounds as the proper diarium.

70. Produximus. The majority of MSS. favour producimus, but [O.] seems to have reason on his side in saying,—'Concinnius cum perfecto conjungitur vox illam 'quam cum presenti, quod requireret potius hanc.' Comp. Ter. Ad. 591,—'Cyathos sorbilans paulatim hunc producam diem.'

71. Beneventum. Originally Maleventum, the Latin form of the Gr. Μαλόεις (cp. Tarentum, from Τάρας; Agrigentum.) But for the popular account of the name, and the change of it, see Liv. X. 15; IX. 27. It was distant from Cocceius' villa twelve miles (eight, Gibbon.)

74. Lambere, "to play upon." Virg. Æn. II. 684,—'lambere flamma comas.'

78. Atabulus, a hot easterly sirocco-like wind. Quintilian, II. VIII. 8, quotes the word. Plin. N. H. XVII. 24, speaks of it as a blighting wind.

79. Erepsemus. For like abbreviations, see Sat. I. IX. 73; II. III. 169; II. VII. 68. So in Virg. 'vixet, jusso, traxe.'

80. Fumo. The high situation of this farm, among the Appennines, must have made it damp and cold, even late in the spring. So Walck. vol. I. p. 222.

86. Viginti et. Observe the singular position of et, belonging to viginti, yet coming after it.

ib. Redis. Reda, like petorritum, essedum, is said to be a Gallic word.

87. Oppidulo. Said by the Scholiast to be Equus Tuticus, near Ariano. On the name Equus Tuticus, see Varronianus, p. 135, in voc. Touticus, an Oscan word. This, however, was out of the direct road from Trivicum to Canusium, which lay through Asculum. Some contend that Asculum is meant.

ib. Quod versu dicere non est. A Lucilian phrase:

'Servorum est festu' dies hic
'Quem plane hexametro versu non dicere possis;

where Sigillaria is the name intended. Compare Ovid. ex Pont. IV. XII. 5—12; and Martial, IX. XII. 10, sqq.

88. Venit, "is sold," so scarce is it. Martial, III. LVI. (quoted by Orelli), makes the same complaint of Ravenna. The antithesis is not, as the form of words would suggest, between the superlatives vilissima and pulcherrimus.

89. Ultra, i.e. "to the next stage."

91. Aquæ non ditior urna, i. e. "Canusium (qui locus, etc.) has not a drop more "water than the other town." (Cp. v. 87.)

92. Diomede. He was reputed the founder of Arpi or Argyripa (cp. Virg. Æn. XI. 246,) Canusium, and Equus Tuticus.

94. Fessi pervenimus. Both these words imply a longer day's journey than usual. Gibbon infers that they did not halt at Canusium. Rubi was thirty miles from Canusium.

95. Corruptius...via pejor. 'The repeated complaints on this subject give reason 'for suspecting that the Appian Way then reached only to Capua, and that it 'was not Julius Cæsar that carried it to Brundisium.' Gibbon, p. 344. Capua was the original terminus of this Queen of Roads; it was continued to Beneventum, where it divided into two branches; the northern one derived from Gnatia the name of Via Egnatia.

97. Bari. Twenty-two miles from Rubi, 'donc comme aujourd'hui habitée par des pecheurs,' Walckenaer.

ib. Gnatia. Thirty-seven miles from Barium.

ib. Lymphis iratis exstructa. The phrase must signify either (as in the towns of vv. 87, 91) a want of water; or, as the Scholiast explains, injury done in its neighbourhood by torrent streams. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 225.

99. This prodigy is mentioned in Pliny, N. H. II. 111, (107,) as one of many reported instances of latent natural fire,—'In Salentino oppido Egnatiæ, imposito 'ligno in saxum quoddam ibi sacrum, protinus flammam existere.'

100. 'Recte Bentl. 'Judæi habitabant trans Tiberim, et multo maximam partem 'erant libertini...Apella autem libertinorum est nomen, satis frequens in 'Inscriptt.' [O.]

101. Securum agere ævum. The Epicurean theory. See Lucret. V. 83,—'Nam bene qui didicere deos securum agere ævum.'

103. Tristes, i. e. non securos.

104. Brundisium. Forty-four miles from Egnatia.

SATIRE VI.

AN answer to his enemies, who out of jealousy reflected on his low birth, and attributed his good fortune to unworthy arts. He appeals first to Mæcenas' generous discernment, and to the principle that merit without rank is superior to rank without merit. He touches on the temptations and invidiousness of an elevated station, and recounts his introduction to his patron, with the preparatory character of his earlier, and the simple and contented character of his present life.

Part of the opening argument is elliptical, and abrupt in expression, (particularly vv. 14—24) It may be drawn out as follows:—

You, Mæcenas, are of the noblest birth, but this does not make you contemptuous, nor do you think merit in a lower rank beneath your notice.

You feel that in all ages men of sterling worth have been found among the humbler classes, and have risen by their worth to eminence; that, on the other hand, there is demerit in the highest ranks, and that so glaring (e. g. in Lævinus) that even the populace admit it, prone as they are to be dazzled by vain show. What then should I do, educated as I have been to a truer judgment, and professing to be superior to, or to see through, popular fallacies; and moreover sufficiently rewarded by your discernment and approval? Should I compete for public honours, things of no intrinsic value, and in the gift of the misjudging?

No, for suppose I did (v. 19,) there are rivals who might be preferred to me, and I might even be absolutely rejected as disqualified: nay, I should deserve it, by straining beyond my proper sphere. But, I might plead,—Who does not wish to rise above his sphere? On the other hand, is any happier for doing so? Or what does he gain but criticism and censure?

Such are the principles I maintain. I have, in accordance with them, kept clear of popular ambition, and therefore claimed exemption from the jealousies which attend it.

My elevation is not to official rank, or conferred by public caprice: it is due to private sentiment and moral estimation. This is not a matter of chance, nor for jealousy. I have a right to these honours, and I thank my patron, and him who by education fitted me for such patronage.

1. Lydorum...Etruscos. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 781; IX. 11. Herodotus (I. 94) gives the story of Lydian emigration to Etruria. The account in Herodotus of the Lydian emigration is contradicted by Dionysius Halic. 1, and doubt is thrown upon its value as historical fact. For a description of the races of Etruria, their names and language, see Varronianus, ch. I. with the map by the title-page, and ch. V. § 11. The conclusion there obtained is, that the country was inhabited chiefly by two distinct peoples, Tyrrheni and Etrusci.

(α.) The Tyrrheni were a branch of the great Pelasgian family. Sophocles (Inach. Fr. 256*)* combines the two names, Τυρσηνοῖσι Πελασγοῖς. Both in fact are descriptive names, and are translated: 1. "The tower-builders," from τύρσις, i. e. turris (cp. Pindar, Ol. II. 70), the Pelasgian settlements being everywhere marked by gigantic "Cyclopean" buildings: and 2. "The swarthy Asiatics," (Varr. p. 37.)

(β) The Etrusci, or Hetrusci, were probably of the same stock as the Ræti: they are supposed to have invaded and conquered the Tyrrheni, who may, however, have remained in the country as περίοικοι, especially in South Etruria, while the dominant race held the cities. (From Liv. X. 4, and IX. 36, it is inferred that the town language differed from that of the country; also that the country dialect of Cære was intelligible as far north as Clusium.) The Etrusci called themselves Rasena (Ρασένα, Dionys.), a name perhaps cognate to Ræti; probably meaning "rapid;" and, if so, a natural designation of a warrior tribe. Donaldson compares the πόδας ὠκύς of Homer, and the Roman term for their anciently highest class, Celeres; and remarks by the way, that a leading Rætian tribe has the epithet veloces, in Hor. C. IV. XIV. 11.

4. Legionibus. These must have been foreign, i. e. Etruscan armies, for there is no Cilnius or Mæcenas among the consular names at Rome. Merivale, Hist. ch. XXVII. vol. III. p. 271, (note.)

5. Naso suspendis adunco, "you sneer at." Cp. Sat. II. VIII. 64; and Pers. I. 42,—

> 'Rides,' ait, 'et nimis uncis
> 'Naribus indulges;'

and V. 118,—'Excusso populum suspendere naso.'

8. Dum ingenuus, i. e. provided he be freeborn, no slave. This general patronage could not of course include slaves. But the son of a libertinus was considered ingenuus. Some (as Gesner) understand it as=ingenuis moribus; not so well.

9. Tulli...ignobile regnum. Juv. VIII. 25,—

> 'Ancilla natus trabeam et diadema Quirini,
> 'Et fasces meruit regum ultimus ille bonorum.'

(Obs. that the contrast of the succeeding lines there is drawn from 'juvenes ipsius consulis' (Brutus), as here from 'Valeri genus.')

12. Lævinum. Lævinus was a cognomen of the gens Valeria.

15. Judice quo nosti, i. e. "such a judge as you are aware it is;" (not therefore the same in meaning as quem nosti, "whom you know personally." Compare the difference of nosti qui sit homo and nosti hominem.) For instances of this idiom (which is drawn from the Greek,) see Cic. ad Fam. v. 14,—'Eorum quorum consuesti;' Ov. Trist. V. VI. 36,—'Illo quo reris grandius illud erit;' Liv. I. 29,—'Raptim quibus quisque poterat elatis.' It is to be observed that none of these verbs, consuesco, reor, possum, could govern an accusative. 'Quorum consuesti' is for 'quæ agere consuesti.' Qui stands, however, in this attraction before the transitive dico. Ter. Heaut. I. I. 35,—

'Hæc quidem causa qua dixi tibi.'

17. Imaginibus. Juv. VIII. 1,—

'Longo
'Sanguine censeri pictosque ostendere vultus
'Majorum, et stantes in curribus Æmilianos,
'Et Curios jam dimidios,' sqq.

20. Decio. Publius Decius Mus, famous for his self-devotion in the Latin war, 340 B. C., as was his grandson in the third Samnite war, 295 B. C. (Liv. X. 27.) See Juv. VIII. 254.

ib. Novo. A novus homo was the first of his family who attained to public honours. So Juv. VIII. 237,—'Hic novus Arpinas, ignobilis.' Compare Marius' speech in Sallust, B. Jug. 85,—'Me hominem novum...contemnunt novitatem meam, ego illorum ignaviam,' etc.

Decio novo, i. e. a Decius of undistinguished, untried family; a 'Village Hampden.' ib. Censor...Appius, "an Appius." Appius Claudius Cæcus was censor 312—310 B. C., and the searching strictness of his censorship was as proverbial as afterwards was that of Cato.

22. Propria...pelle, an allusion to Æsop's 'Ass in the Lion's skin.' [O.] quotes Martial, III. XVI.

24. Tilli. This Tillius is said by the Scholiast to have been expelled from the Senate by J. Cæsar, as a partisan of Pompey; and, after Cæsar's death, to have recovered his rank. Orelli suggests that he may have been a brother of Tillius Cimber, the conspirator.

25. Clavum, "the laticlave" of the senators. Tribuno, sc. militum.

27. Nigris...pellibus, i.e. "the black thongs" fastening the senator's shoe. The mention of a crescent on the shoe is added by Juv. VII. 192,—'Appositam nigræ Lunam subtexit alutæ.' Comp. the half-comic description, 'mutavit calceos,' Cic. Phil. XIII. 13.

29. Audit continuo. Cp. Eurip. Ion, 601,—πόλει ψόφου πλέα (with the context.) So Cic. de Off. II. XIII. 3,—'Siquis...habet causam celebritatis et nominis aut a patre acceptam...aut aliquo casu atque fortuna; in hunc oculi omnium conjiciuntur, atque in eum quid agat, quemadmodum vivat, inquiritur.'

37. Mortales, i. e. homines. Cp. 'mortalem,' S. II. VI. 58. Cp. Liv. XXVII, 5,—'Multis mortalibus cum alia omnis generis præda captis.' See Plautus, Men. XXX. and Hildyard's note.

38. Syri, Damæ, common names for slaves.

39. Saxo, sc. the Tarpeian rock. Cadmo, i. e. the executioner.

40. Novius, an obscure person.

43. Magna sonabit, a quality of value in a mob-orator. Danton (in France) possessed it. Herodotus, VII. 117, mentions it. So Homer (before the invention of trumpets, it must be remembered), Il. ε. 785. Cp. ξ. 148.

44. Tubas, used at funerals. So Pers. III. 103,—'Hinc tuba, candelæ.'

49. Forsit. ἅπαξ λεγόμενον. Honorem, i. e. "a public post, official rank."

54. Olim. So in v. 47. This word seems to imply that the satire was written at a considerable interval after Philippi. See further markings of time in Sat. II. VI. 40.

57. Infans, not "speechless" absolutely, but "slow of speech;" used nearly in the primitive sense. Lucret. (V. 1030) has the subst. 'infantia linguæ.' Cic. de Cl. Or. LXXX. 278,—'Ubi ardor animi qui etiam ex infantium ingeniis elicere 'voces et querellas solet.'

59. Satureiano. Saturcium, or Saturium, was in the neighbourhood of Tarentum. Orelli quotes mention of it in the oracle given to Phalanthus, in Strabo, VI. III. 2,—Σατύριόν τοι δῶκα Τάραντά τε πίονα δῆμον.

ib. Caballo. A rustic or low-class term for "horses;" yet the term from which the Fr. cheval, the Eng. chivalry and cavalry are derived.

67. Nævos. Cic. de Cl. Or. 313,—'Totum me non nævo aliquo aut crepundiis, sed 'corpore omni videris velle cognoscere.'

68. Mala lustra, "low haunts, scenes of dissipation." Cp. Lucret. IV. 1132,—'Desidiose agere ætatem *lustris*que perire.' Cp. Liv. XXV. 43.

71. Qui macro pauper agello, i. e. "poor as he was, he afforded me a better education than usual."

72. Flavi ludum, i. e. the grammar school of the place.

74. Suspensi. Cp. ὁ τὴν πήραν ἐξηρτημένος, Lucian, Vit. Auct. VII.

75. Octonis...Idibus, i. e. "the Ides of eight months in the year." Martial (X. 62) clearly implies that the schools were closed for the four summer months, from the Ides of June to those of October. His lines are as follow:

'Ludi magister parce simplici turbæ ...

. . . . . .

'Albæ Leone flammeo calent luces,
'Tostamque fervens Julius coquit messem:
'Cirrata loris horridis Scythæ pellis,
'Qua vapulavit Marsyas Celæneus,
'Ferulæque tristes, sceptra pædagogorum,
'Cessent et Idus dormiant in Octobres.'

Octonis has been variously explained. 1. 'Quia Idus omnes in octavum post Nonas diem incidunt,' (but this according to Roman calculation is not true.) 2. 'Sive, ut ait Lambinus, Iduum dies sunt octo.' [O.] 3. 'De exercitiis puerorum qui computarent æra,' i. e. 'quæ Idibus exigerentur. Octonæ...quia post Nonas sunt octo.' (Zeun.) 4. It has been thought that octonæ may be equivalent to 'Octobres.' (There is something plausible in this last, if it be not an anachronism; for the year in the Augustan age began with January, not March, as anciently.) But the interpretation given first of all is the best. The only difficulty is Macrobius' statement that 'Martio mense mercedem exsolvebant magistris quam completus annus deberi fecit,' (Macr. Saturn. I. 12.) But this is done away by Becker's explanation, that the monthly payments and the four months' holiday belonged only to the poorer and inferior schools. In the higher schools the payments were annual, and made probably in March, after the Quinquatria. He cites Ov. Fast. III. 829. The verse of Juvenal, X. 116,—'Quisquis adhuc uno partam colet asse Minervam,' he interprets as referring to the Minerval, or entrance fee. (See the dissertation in Becker's Gallus, especially p. 191.)

78. Vestem servosque. It was natural that a raised scale of expenses, and an attendance not needed at the provincial school, or where the poet's grade in life was known and defined, might be called for, as the consequence of sending him to Rome. The number of attendant slaves was a standard of wealth. This is implied in Sat. I. III. 12. Comp. Juv. III. 141,—'Quot pascit servos?'

79. In magno ut populo, i. e. "as was suitable in a populous and fashionable city." This is the punctuation and construction adopted by Bentley and Orelli. Some take ut si together.

82. Pudicum. 'Præ pudore abstinentem,' Orelli.

83. Qui primus...honos, sc. pudor. As Burke has expressed it,—'That sensibility of 'principle, that chastity of honour, which felt a stain like a wound.' Cp. Juv. VIII. 83,—'Summum crede nefas animam præferre pudori.'

84. Ab...opprobrio quoque. Cp. S. Paul,—'Provide things honest in the sight of all men.' Rom. XII. 17.

90. Dolo ..suo, "by their own fault." There is an idiomatic abbreviation here. The full construction would be,—'Non sic me defendam, ut magna pars' (not negat, but) 'se defendit negando.' Cp. Ov. Rem. Am. 167,—'Quod potuit, ne nil illic ageretur amavit,') i.e. 'quod potuit fecit,' scil. 'amavit.' See Hermann, ad Vigerum adnot. 194, c. There is an excellent instance of this construction in Soph. Trach. 1048—52,— οὔπω τοιοῦτον οὔτ' ἄκόιτις ἡ Διὸς προὔθηκεν . . . . . .

οἷον τόδ' ἡ δολῶπις Οἰνέως κόρη καθῆψεν ὥμοις τοῖς ἐμοῖς Ἐρινύων ὑφαντὸν ἀμφίβλητρον.

i. e. οἷον μόχθον προὔθηκεν καθάψασα τόδε, κ. τ. λ.

(The same construction is in the Greek, and in our version, of the Epistle to the Romans, VIII. 3.)

92. Istis, sc. 'istorum voce et ratione.' See C. II. VI. 14.

96. Honestos. With this usage of the word, Orelli compares Plaut. Capt. II. III. 32,—'Me honore honestiorem semper fecit.' (Comp. sup. v. 36, 'inhonestus,' with abl. case.) But there is much in favour of the var. reading honustos. It is in one of the best MSS. the St. Gallen: it is a genuine form, (see Lucr. III. 113, and Munro's note :) also it corresponds with onus in v. 99. Many MSS. have onustos. Lambinus decidedly approves it. Honestos indeed may bear the same meaning; compare Varro, Lat. Ling. V. 73,—'Honos ab honere, sive onere, itaque honestum dicitur quod oneratum; et dictum,—Onus est honos qui sustinet rempublicam.' Ausonius, Id. IV. 94, sqq., seems to have imitated Horace, and plays on the senses of honor, onus, oneratus.

101. Salutandi. See on E. I. VII. 8. 'Explicat Heindorf 'salutatores plures 'accipiendi.' Præter Cic. ad Fam. VII. 28; IX. 20: poterat afferre etiam Senecæ illud de Brev. V. 2, 'Quam multis nihil liberi relinquit circumfusus clientium populus.' Non tamen ejus int. comprobo.' [O.] The general sense of the passage is expressed, and more fully, in Xen. Cyrop. VII. III. 40,—Ἦ γὰρ οὕτως, ὦ Σάκα, ὑπολαμβάνεις ὡς ἐγὼ νῦν τοσούτῳ ἥδιον ζῶ ὅσῳ πλείω κέκτημαι; οὐκ οἶσθα, ἔφη, ὅτι ἐσθίω καὶ πίνω καὶ καθεύδω οὐδ' ὁτιοῦν νῦν ἥδιον ἢ τότε ὅτε πένης ἦν; ὅτι δὲ ταῦτα πολλά ἐστι, τόσουτον κερδαίνω, πλείω μὲν φυλάττειν δεῖ, πλείω δὲ ἄλλοις διανέμειν πλείονα δὲ ἐπιμελούμενον πράγματα ἔχειν. Νῦν γὰρ δὴ ἐμὲ πολλοὶ μὲν οἰκέται σῖτον αἰτοῦσι, πολλοὶ δὲ πιεῖν, πολλοὶ δὲ ἱμάτια.

104. Curto, 'curtata cauda:' v. Schol. 'Cujus tamen moris Britannici aliud 'vestigium apud Romanos non superest...melius explices...vili, exigui pretii.' Orelli.

107. Sordes. The "meanness" consisted in the taking with him no friends (cp. v. 102), and only five (cp. Sat. I. III. 12) attendants (laden too with such utensils), when he was invested with a dignified and wealthy magistracy.

109. Lasanum. Suidas, in voce,—λάσανα, οἱ χυτρόποδες ("foot-pans") καὶ τὰ μαγειρεῖα (i. e. "kitchen utensils.") Cp. Aristoph. Pac. 893.

ib. Œnophorum. Pers. V. 140,—'Jam pueris pellem succinctus et œnophorum aptas.'

111. Milibus atque aliis, ("happier than you) and thousands besides." (Orelli takes aliis as neuter, "in a thousand other respects." In this case, could the substantive be understood?)

112. i. e. "I go where I will, unnoticed and at my ease; ask what questions, look 'on at what sights I like."

113. Fallacem...vespertinum, epithets implying the place and time frequented by jugglers, hawkers, fortune-tellers (divinis), etc.

116. Lapis albus, "a marble slab."

117. Echinus, probably=concha salis, as in Sat. I. III. 14; or, as the Scholiast,—'Vas æneum in quo calices lavantur.'

118. Patera, "a saucer," used especially for libation, as in Virg. Geor. II. 192,— 'Purum et sine labe salinum
('Quid metuas?) cultrixque foci secura patella.'
Cp. 'Salinum patellamque deorum causa habero,' Liv. XXVI. 37.

ib. Guttus, "a cruet" with narrow neck, for pouring out drop by drop (guttatim.) Orelli cites Varro, Lat. Ling. V. 124,—'A guttis guttum...a sumendo simpulum 'nominarunt. In hujusce locum in conviviis e Græcia successit epichysis et 'cyathus; in sacrificiis remansit guttus et simpulum.'

120. Marsya. The statue of Marsyas in the Forum. The emblematic meaning of his position there is given in the Biogr. Dict. The attitude of the statue, leaning forward with raised arms, is here in jest interpreted as an attitude of defence against, or abhorrence of, Novius and his usury.

122. Jaceo, i. e. 'lectulus me excipit,' Sat. I. IV. 134. 'Cave accipias pro dormio.' 'Jacere hic est perinde ac studere,' Bentl. Cp. E. I. XVII. 6; XVIII. 34.

124. Natta. 'Hinc idem nomen desumpsere, Pers. III. 31; Juv. VIII. 95.' Or.

126. Lusumque trigonem, "the game at ball." Cp. Martial, VII. LXXII. 9; XII. LXXXIII. 3. Trigonem is here an adjective. The word is derived from Gr. τρίγωνος, the players being three, and forming a triangle. (For comments on another reading,—fugio rabiosi tempora signi,—and inferences as to the value of the Horatian MSS., see the Notes and Excursus of Orelli.)

122. Vagor; aut ego...ungor. Lecto aut scripto expresses the occupation until about ten, ad quartam. Then he goes out for a stroll, or else prepares to take part in the games of the Campus. Compare with this whole description Cic. ad Fam. IX. 20,—'Hæc est igitur nunc vita nostra: mane salutamus domi.....ubi 'salutatio defluxit, litteris me involvo, aut scribo aut lego. Veniunt etiam 'qui me audiunt.....Inde corpori omne tempus datur.'

SATIRE VII.

This satire contains the humorous and sarcastic description of a quarrel between a rich merchant and money-lender of Clazomenæ, and an officer on the staff of Brutus, when acting as prætor in Asia. It is said by the Scholiast, that Rupilius had given Horace personal provocation, by sneering at his low birth. Any way, both in his case and in that of his adversary, there must have been magnum spectaculum to the poet and his friends, and a lesson to purse-proud vulgarity and domineering insolence too good to be lost.

There is nothing in the other Satires resembling this one, if we except Sat. V. 52—69, in which the professed jester's sham-fight admits of an evident comparison with the real acrimony of these disputants, notwithstanding the difference of rank and station.

1. Rex Rupilius, a Roman eques, native of Præneste, who, when proscribed by the Triumvirs, joined the party of Brutus.

2. Hybrida, "mongrel." 'Patre Asiatico, matre Romana. Civitatem Romanam obtinuerat.' Schol. Compare the term ἡμίονος, to denote the mixed extraction of Cyrus the Great, in Herod. I. 91.

3. Lippis. Inflamed or weak eyes was a malady prevalent at Rome. The two classes here mentioned were proverbial as newsmongers. Bentley quotes Plautus, Amphitr. IV. I. 5,—'In medicinis, in tonstrinis, enumerated, in a list of places of concourse. So it was at Athens. Arist. Plutus, 338,— λόγος γ' ἦν νὴ τὸν Ἡρακλέα πόλυς ἐπὶ τοῖσι κουρείοισι τῶν καθημένων...

Cp. Polyb. III. 20,—κουρεακὴ καὶ πάνδημος λαλιά.

6. Durus, "pig-headed, obstinate." Odio corresponds in meaning to the adj. molesti (v. 10), "annoyance."

7. Confidens, used in a bad sense, and so contrasting with the uncompounded fidens. See Cic. Tusc. Qu. III. 7, (14.)

8. Equis albis præcurrere denotes easy or evident superiority; "to go far ahead of; to distance." (With a different application, but a proverbial usage, not unlike this, ἵπποις θοαῖς stands for quam celerrime in Pindar, Hyporch IV. 6.) "White" was an accepted term for the best horses. As such they appear in the poets. Hom. Il. κ. 437; Virg. Æn. XII. 84. Compare Pindar's λευκοπώλων Τυνδαριδᾶν, Pyth. I. 66. They were assigned to divinities (see the legend of the battle of Regillus in Arnold, Hist. ch. VII. p. 118, taken from Dionysius), and used in the triumphal car. For practical purposes, however, they are disparaged in the Georgics, III. 82.

10. Hoc...sunt...jure...quo, "they are (or act) just like," etc.

13. Ultima...mors. C. E. II. II. 173, with Bentley's note; and Gr. πυμάτῳ ὀλέθρῳ, Musæus, Hero. Le. 1. ult.

16. Diomedi...Glauco. An interpretation of the episode in Hom. Il. ζ. 119, sqq.; scarcely fair to Glaucus, yet seemingly invited by the concluding lines (v. 236—7),— τεύχε' ἄμειβεν χρύσεα χαλκείων ἑκατόμβοι' ἐννεαβοίων.

19. Asiam, Asia, the Roman province: its limits are no where exactly defined.

20. Compositum, sc. par, "a pair of gladiators matched." So, 'gladiatorum compositiones,' Cic. ad Fam. II. 8.

22. Ridetur seems to be used impersonally.

23. Cohortem. So Epist. I. III. 6; I. VIII. 14. The staff or retinue of Brutus. So Tibull. I. III. 2. 'Ipse (sc. Messalla) 'cohorsque,' Cic. ad Qu. Fr. I. I. 4.

25. Canem, i. e. Caniculam. Virg. Æn. X. 274.

27. Fertur quo rara securis, i. e. "in a precipitous place."

28. Multo fluenti. Θρασυνομένῳ καὶ πολλῷ ῥέοντι καθ' ὑμῶν οὐκ εἶξα. Demosth. de Cor. 173, p. 272.

30. Vindemiator, "like a rough vine-pruner."

31. Cuculum, "cuckoo," a common joke. Cp. Aristoph. Equ. 697, περιεκόκκυσα (="I laugh at him,") explained by Plin. H. N. XVIII. 26, (66,) as originating in a jest upon the slovenliness of those vine-dressers, whose vines were not pruned before the cuckoo came. Compare the curious passage in Arist. Aves, 504—508:

Αἰγύπτου δ' αὖ καὶ Φοινίκης πάσης κόκκυξ βασιλεὺς ἦν· χὤποθ' ὁ κόκκυξ εἶποι κόκκυ, τότε γ' οἱ Φοίνικες ἅπαντες τοὺς πυροὺς ἂν καὶ τὰς κριθὰς ἐν τοῖς πεδίοις ἐθέριζον.
τοῦτ' ἄρ' ἐκεῖν' ἦν τοὔπος ἀληθῶς· κόκκυ, ψωλοὶ πεδίονδε.

32. Aceto="sharp wit." Plaut. Pseud. II. IV. 49.

35. Regem. Besides the play of meaning in this word (with which Orelli compares Cic. ad Att. I. XVI. 8), jugulas is (by metaphor) capable of a double sense; it is used of a repartee in Ter. Eun. III. I. 27,—

'Pulchre mehercle! dictum et sapienter, papæ!
'Jugularas hominem,' (Eng. "You settled him.")

SATIRE VIII.

This Satire is a speech put into the mouth of Priapus, the scare-crow deity of gardens. It contains invectives against Canidia (see Epode V. and the introductory note; and compare Epode XVII. 58,) and implied compliments to Mæcenas, who had reclaimed and converted into gardens the Puticuli on the Esquiline hill. These Puticuli were sand-pits, which, when their stores had been used up, were left open, as common receptacles for the corpses of suicides, slaves, and criminals. The contemptuous tone of v. 10 is worth remarking, as an exemplification of the contrast between the heathen and the Christian usages and ideas; and this contrast will be heightened by considering that these very sand-quarries of the Esquiline grew eventually into the famous 'Catacombs,' which were known for ages, first as the hiding-place, then as the cemetery, of the Christians of Rome.

---

1. Truncus...ficulnus. Theocr. Epigr. IV. 2,—σύκινον εὐρήσεις ἀρτιγλυφὲς ξόανον. (A fig-wood statue of Priapus.)

3. Furum aviumque...formido. Cp. Virg. Geor. IV. 110.

8. Huc.....portanda, i. e. slaves would lay out on a wretched bier the corpses of their fellow-slaves, for conveyance hither.

ib. Ejecta...cellis, "cast out from the dens they lived in." (Angustis cellis sounds at first like Gray's 'narrow cell,' but has nothing really in common with it.)

10. Commune. Such sepulture in ante-Christian times was looked on as contemptible. See Maitland on the Catacombs, p. 39, who remarks on this passage. (There is some mistake in his rendering of it.)

12. Mille pedes, i. e. "a frontage of 1000 feet, with a depth of 300."

13. Heredes. The letters H. M. H. N. S. (='hoc monumentum heredem non sequitur') were commonly engraved on tombs, to deprecate any alienation of the ground to other purposes. The mention, however, of a cippus here, where there was as much exposure as sepulture of corpses, is merely a joke.

14. Salubribus, i. e. made so by Mæcenas.

15. Quo='in quo: non repetita præp. in post in aprico,' [O.] The sense is,—"Now there are sunny walks and cheerful views, where lately all was gloom "and whitening bones."

22. Ossa legant. Ov. Her. VI. 90,—'Certaque de tepidis colligit ossa rogis.'

ib. Herbasque. Comp. Soph. Ριζοτόμοι, Frag. 479, a passage imitated by Virg. Æn. IV. 513.

25. Majore, sc. majore natu, to distinguish her from her younger sister. So maximus is used absolutely, E. I. II. 1.

28. Cruor...ut inde. This remarkable superstition, of the ghosts gathering round sacrificial blood, is in Hom. Od. λ. 34, sqq.

30. Cerea. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 80.

32. Servilibus...peritura modis. Compare Liv. XXIV. 14; XXXII. 38,—'In servilem 'modum lacerati.' (For the Syntax, see sup. Sat. I. III. 10.)

35. Canes. Virg. Æn. VI. 257.

42. Variæ...colubræ, "spotted snakes."

48. Caliendrum, "a head dress."

SATIRE IX.

The favour of Mæcenas exposed Horace to detraction, as we see in Satires IV. and VI. So it invited sycophancy: and here we have a lively Satire on an intruder, forcing himself on the poet's acquaintance. It has been thought that Propertius was the bore thus satirised; but there is no evidence of it: the description has also been compared with the third character of Theophrastus, but on little grounds. See Walckenaer, vol. I. p. 281. The Satire was no doubt founded on fact. The character is humorously copied by Molière, in the first Scene of Les Fâcheux. Compare too Ben Jonson, The Poetaster, Act III. Sc. I. In the course of the dialogue, incidentally, is asserted the honourable and independent relation which existed between the poet and his patron. There is a curious and difficult allusion to the Jews in v. 69.

---

4. Quid agis? "How are you?"—the common form of salutation. Compare E. I. III. 15. But see a double meaning put on it in Cic. pro Planc. 14,—'Quid agis, Grani?...Imo vero tu, Druse, quid agis?' a retort upon him as 'multa in rempublicam molienti.'

ib. Dulcissime rerum. Compare, for this phrase, Ovid; Art. Am. I. 213; Metam. VIII. 49; XII. 502. The Greek ἄριστα ἀνθρώπων, (i. e. "the best way in the world,") as in Plat. Theæt. 15, is nearly the converse of it.

5. Cupio, etc. Cp. 'Omnia quæ tu vis, ea cupio,' Plaut. Pers. V. I. 14. Id. Rud. IV. IV. 1.

6. Num quid vis? A phrase of bidding "good-bye." See Plautus, Aulul. II. I. 53; Ter. Eun. II. III. 49.

7. Noris="you must know me, surely." This is better than construing it as a wish.

8. Misere...quærens. So again v. 14. Cp. Ter. Andr. III. II. 40; Heaut. IV. I. 36. Compare the Greek compound, δυσέρως; and Ov. Her. VII. 30,—'pejus amo.' Compare too the Virgilian phrase, 'dira cupido,' Georg. I. 37; Æn. IX. 185.

11. Cerebri felicem. Comp. Sat. I. V. 21, cerebrosus; i. e. Bolanus would have rid himself of the man at once, by flying into a passion. Bolanus is a cognomen derived from Bola, a town of the Æqui.

15. Jam dudum. Wagner writes jandudum—'M in compositis ante d mutatur in 'n.' Or the words may be written separately. Here, S. has jam video dudum.

16. I cannot think Orelli's punctuation of this verse an improvement upon the common text. Hinc weakens and interferes with the sense, if joined with persequar (if he had not been persequens all along, it might have some meaning.) And, unless the sentence is interrogative, nunc is out of place, and cumque is wanted. The sentences run thus: "You want to get away; it is "of no use; I shall hold on, and follow you (per) to the end. Where may "you be going to next?" Then the next line is natural as a reply. Bentley reads with some MSS. prosequar; the difference of meaning is worth notice,—'Prosequar esset, officii causa porro sequar.'

18. Cubat. Ov. Her. XX. 166.

ib. Cæsaris hortos. The gardens or pleasure grounds bequeathed (Suet. Jul. Cæs. 83) by Julius Cæsar to the people. They were beyond (i. e. on the right bank of) the Tiber.

21. Subiit. On the quantity of this termination, see Lachmann, Lucr. III. 1042.

22. Viscum, mentioned again Sat. I. X. 83. Varium, Carm. I. 6. Hermogenes, Sat. I. III. 129.

28. Composui, i. e. "I have buried them all."

32. Laterum dolor=pleuritis, Schol. Qu. Whether laterum dolor and lateris dolor are properly the same? Lateris dolor, in Cic. de Or. III. II. 6, was no doubt a sudden and short illness, such as "pleurisy." But latera specially signifies "lungs," and laterum dolor might be inferred to mean "lung-disease," or "consumption."

33. Quando...cumque, "at some time or other." This is properly an elliptical construction; but so quicumque, qualiscumque, are commonly used; so ubicumque, Sat. I. II. 62.

35. Quarta...parte diei, i. e. hora tertia. Martial, Ep. IV. VIII. marks out the occupations of a Roman day,—

'Prima salutantes atque altera conterit horn,
'Exercet raucos tertia causidicos.
'In quintam varios extendit Roma labores;
'Sexta quies lassis; septima finis erit.
'Sufficit in nonam nitidis octava palæstris;
'Imperat extructos frangere nona toros.
'Hora libellorum decima est, Euphemе, meorum
'Temperat ambrosias cum tua cura dapes.'

37. Perdere litem, sc. debebat. The general phrase corresponds to the Gr. ὀφλεῖν δίκην, "to lose the action;" or if "by default," ὀφ. δ. ἐρήμην: but here litem must mean "the bail deposited."

38. Si me amas. 'Si quicquam me amas,' Cic. ad Att. V. XVII. Compare amabo te, or simply amabo, as a phrase of entreaty, in, e. g. Cic. ad Fam. II. 7; Ter. Eun. III. III. 28.

ib. Ades, as in Plaut. Amph. IV. III. 3,—'Advocatus mihi adsis.' Cp. Liv. XXVI. 48, aderat, explained as it is immediately afterwards by advocatis partis utriusque. So Gr. παρεῖναι, e. g. Demosth. p. 890, 26; 911, 7.

44. Paucorum hominum, i. e. "keeps little company; admits few persons to his "society; and shows his wisdom in doing so." Cp. E. I. IX. 4,—'legentis honesta.' For the idiom, see Ter. Eun. III. I. 18,— 'Th. Imo sic homo

'Est perpaucorum hominum. Gn. Imo nullorum, arbitror,
'Si tecum vivit.'

41—48. These verses are variously divided by editors, between Horace and his follower. It seems most natural to assign them entirely to the latter, who is too loquacious (v. 33) to wait for an answer.

46. Ferre secundas, "to play the second part to you," as a δευτεραγωνίστης, whose business it was to help and show off the leading actor to the greatest advantage. Cic. in Qu. Cæcil. 15.

47. Hunc hominem, sc. me. τόνδε τὸν ἄνδρα, as in Soph. Aj. 78, et passim.

53. Sic habet (elliptical), as Gr. οὕτως ἔχει.

56. Aditus. Virg. Æn. IV. 293,—

'Temptaturum aditus et quæ mollissima fandi
'Tempora.'

57. Cp. Juv. III. 184,—

'Quid das ut Cossum aliquando salutes?
'.....' præstare tributa clientes
'Cogimur, et cultis augere peculia servis.'

59. Nil sine magno...labore. Soph. Elect. 945; Xen. Mem. II. I. 20, (quoting Epicharmus.)

64. Prensare. Pressare is a reading, seemingly of less authority. Orelli says of it,—'Sic dedi cum Schol. et Codd. aliq. Postquam volsa erant brachia prensari 'jam vix poterant sed pressari, nisi statues ὕστερον πρότερον.' Yet the attempt expressed in prensare seems to correspond to the adj. lentus, i. e. "yielding," "unresisting, so as to give no firm hold or support."

69. Tricesima sabbata. This seems most naturally interpreted to mean "the 30th day of the month," 'Quæ Judæi Neomenias dicunt.' Schol. Comp. S. S. Isai. I. 13, 14; Psalm LXXXI. Dacier calculated that the Paschal festival, reckoned from the first of September, would fall in the 30th week. Orelli quotes Roeder's calculation, that from April, the beginning of the Jewish sacred year, to October, there would be twenty-five Sabbaths; that in the first fourteen days of that month (the 7th) there were, besides the two regular Sabbaths, the two festivals, viz. the Feast of Trumpets and the Day of Atonement (see S. S. Numb. XXIX.); and that, as these festivals are called Sabbaths, the 30th Sabbath would fall on the ensuing festival, the 1st day of the Feast of Tabernacles (the 15th of Tisri.) Orelli adds an anonymous correction of this process, which, by adding in the σάββατον δευτερόπρωτον (of S. Luke, VI. 1) and the Day of Pentecost, makes the 30th Sabbath fall on the 10th day of Tisri, the Great Day of Atonement.

ib. Sabbata. Ov. Rem. Am. 219,—'Nec te peregrina morentur Sabbata.'
Juv. XIV. 96,—'Quidam sortiti metuentem sabbata patrem.'

75. Adversarius. Some have supposed this litigant to be different from the one alluded to as vadato, in v. 36, since that suit would have been lost by default. But it is easier to suppose one person meant; and the explanation will be, either that the lis of v. 37 was not the full amount the defendant would lose if nonsuited, or that, as Orelli interprets it, the plaintiff was so hot and so self-confident, as not to be content without open decision in court. On this subject, Long's note on Cic. Verr. II. III. 15, may be consulted. If he is right (unless adversarius is a fresh litigant,) rapit in jus, v. 77, is an incorrect phrase, for in judicium: rapere in jus is properly=ad prætorem: judicium expresses the courts of the judices, to whom the prætor remitted the case. See Plaut. Pers. IV. IX. 8,—

'Age ambula in jus, leno. Quid me in jus vocas!
'Illim apud prætorem dicam, sed ego in jus voco.

'Nonne antestaris? Tuan ego causa, carnufex, Quoiquam mortali libero aures atteram?

. . . . . .

'Sequere hac, mea gnata, me usque ad prætorem. Sequor.'

Cp. Ib. Curcul. V. II. 23, sqq.

76. Antestari, "to call as a witness." If the person appealed to agreed to become witness, the plaintiff touched his ear, in sign of making him such. Thus Horace willingly offers his (opponit aurem. See in Varronianus, p. 241, the comment on Table I. of the XII Tables,—'Si in jus vocat ni it antestator igitur em capito.'

78. Sic me servavit. Hom. Il. v. 443,—τὸν δ' ἐξήρπαξεν Ἀπόλλων. Some suppose a reference to the statue of Apollo in the Forum Augusti,—'Forum jurisque peritus Apollo,' Juv. I. 128. 'Sed hoc minus probabile videtur.' O.

SATIRE X.

The fourth satire, by its remarks on Lucilius, had called forth much would-be criticism. The rivals and depreciators of Horace had seized on what seemed to be an opportunity of enlisting popular sympathies against him, and of backing the established fame of the old Poet against the growing success of the new. Horace defends his expressed judgment, unmasks and retorts on their jealousy, vindicates contemporary merit, by distinguishing the great literary names which redeem the age from any slur of inferiority to the preceding, and with a modest, but confident, assurance appeals to their decision.

The first eight lines, beginning 'Lucili, quam sis.....,' are confessedly spurious.

1. Nempe, a word of acquiescence: "I grant, I said, etc."

3. Sale. It is usually in the plural that this word has the metaphorical meaning of "wit and humour." But Orelli quotes instances of the singular from Cic. N. D. II. XXIX. 74; Tusc. Qu. V. XIX. 55; Brut. XXXIV. 128,—'Omnes sale facetiisque superabat.'

4. Defricuit, lit. "rubbed in," as salt into a sore place.

ib. Charta...eadem, "in the same satire," (the 4th.)

6. Laberi. Decimus Laberius. See Milman's Personæ Hor. Orelli comments thus,—'Mimi ipsi non solum Horatio, sed etiam Ciceroni haud nimis placebant.' Cic. ad Fam. XII. XVIII. 2,—'Equidem sic jam obdurui, ut ludis Cæsaris 'nostri animo æquissimo.....audirem Laberii et Publii (Syri) poemata.' Laberius and his plays gave rise to some jests, and perhaps some jealousy: see Sueton. J. Cæsar, 39. A. Gellius says, L. XVII 14,—'Cæsarem ita Laberii 'maledicentia et arrogantia offendebat, ut acceptiores et probatiores sibi esse 'Publii quam Laberii mimos prædicaret.'

7—15. Ergo non satis est, etc. i. e. "true and finished satire may be humorous, "must be instructive, free from verbiage, and diversified in style."

11. Tristi...jocoso.

> 'Formed, by thy converse, happily to steer
> 'From grave to gay, from lively to severe.'
>
> Pope's Essay on Man, Ep. IV. ad finem.

12. Modo rhetoris...interdum urbani. These seem to be quasi-instances of the tristi and jocoso; the first, of grave, unsparing declamatory reproach; the last, of tempered raillery, often (v. 15) in reality the most effective.

13. Urbani, i. e. "the polished wit," not coarse, who prefers tempered pleasantry (ridiculum) to savage or cruel jest. For an exposition of urbanus, consult Trench, Synonyms, p. 147.

14. Ridiculum acri, etc. Orelli well compares Cic. de Or. II. LVIII. 236,—'Odiosasque res sæpe, quas argumento dilui non facile est, joco risuque 'dissolvit.'

Churchill says of B. Jonson,—

> 'His comic humour kept the world in awe,
> 'And Laughter frightened Folly more than Law.'

17. Hoc stabant, i. e. "from this" (sc. the finish and freshness of their poetry, dependent on the rules above-described, vv. 7—15) "they derived their success." Stabant. Cp. Epist. II. I. 176; Ter. Hecyr. Prol. II. 7; Phorm. Prol. 9.

ib. Pulcher, 'pulchellus ille et delicatus (stutzerhafte,') [O.] Is the epithet to be explained from theatrical language? Among the characters brought forward in the Roman farces (see the account of the Atellanæ in Varronianus, ch. IV.) 'pulchellus, like the Greek Καλλίας, was used to denote apes and puppets.' From hence is derived our 'Punch,' or Polichinello. It is to be observed, that pulcher here is joined with simius.

18. Simius iste, i. e. Demetrius (see below, vv. 79, 90;) so called from being 'vel 'ineptus Tigellii imitator,' vel (ut Schol.) 'propter deformem ac brevem 'staturam.' Orell.. He was a modulator, or instructor in musical recitation. His discipulæ (v. 91) were female mimes, who, either in private or in the theatre, recited poems and acted them, as is seen in Ovid's expression saltata poemata, i. e. cum saltu recitata, Trist. II. 519.

19. Calvum. C. Licinius Calvus, constantly mentioned in conjunction with his friend Catullus. Cp. Ov. Am. III. IX. 62.

21. Seri studiorum. Gr. ὀψιμαθεῖς (implying superficial and conceited learners.) See Cic. ad Fam. IX. 20.

ib. Quine putetis=estisne qui putetis? "Is it possible you think?" etc.

22. Pitholeon, or Pitholaus, a low satirist.

28. Pedius...Poplicola, a distinguished pleader, brother (by adoption) of Corvinus. Cp. v. 85.

29. Corvinus. Marcus Valerius Poplicola Messalla Corvinus. His eloquence as an advocate is specified again Ars Poet. 370.

ib. Petita...foris, i. e. "of a foreign language."

30. Canusini. Canusium in Apulia, inhabited by a Greek and Oscan population, reflected the mixture of races in its language. The Scholiast acquaints us that Ennius and Lucilius had used this same epithet (bilingues) of the Bruttii.

32. Vetuit. Carm. IV. XV. 1.

33. Cum somnia vera. Comp. Moschus, Europa, 5,—εὖτε καὶ ἀτρεκέων πόιμαίνεται ἔθνος ὀνείρων. Ov. Epist. IX. 196,—'Somnia quo cerni tempore vera solent.'

34. In silvam...ligna. Gr. γλαῦκ' Ἀθήναζε (as Arist. Aves, 302;) quoted as proverbial by Cicero, ad Fam. IX. III. 2.

36. Alpinus, a nickname (see Sat. II. V. 41, for the origin of it) given to M. Furius Bibaculus of Cremona, a bombastic poet, but a successful and keen epigrammatist.

ib. Jugulat...Memnona, "describes the death of Memnon." The Schol. suggests a double meaning, viz. that he murders the subject.

37. Defingit='operose et κακοζήλως describit,' Orelli.

ib. Luteum caput. This was probably Furius' own expression: it seems to be satirised here as ridiculous: if so, the difficulty of explaining it is accounted for. Caput, when used of rivers, means "the source." If so meant here, luteum is a strange epithet. Sometimes, however, it is used of "the mouth," as in Lucan, II. 51; Cæsar, B. G. IV. 10.

38. In æde, sc. 'Musarum, ubi poetæ carmina sua recitabant.' Schol.

ib. Tarpa. Spurius Mæcius Tarpa (Ars P. 387,) was a distinguished critic, and one of a board authorised as censors of poems intended for public recitation.

41. Comis may be construed adverbially, "with address, with graceful ease and pleasantry." It is used again v. 53, to signify "an elegant writer."
Dillenburger points out the choice of verbs here, 'garrire comœdiam, canere 'tragœdiam, ducere epica carmina,' expressing respectively the light and lively dialogue, the dignified or solemn tone of tragedy, the historical and sustained character of epic composition.

42. Fundani. Caius Fundanius, the popular comic poet of the day.

43. Pede ter percusso=trimetris, Ars P. 252.

ib. Forte epos, "Epic poetry."

44. Molle...facetum, epithets descriptive of the Eclogues and Georgics, the Æneid being yet unpublished. Quintilian, referring to this passage, explains facetum as a term (appellationem) 'decoris et excultæ cujusdam elegantiæ.'—Inst. VI. III. 19.

46. Hoc erat, "this (viz. satiric poetry) (was left for, and) was better suited to "me, though I confess my inferiority to Lucilius, (inventore minor) especially "as the inventor of the style."

ib. Varrone. Publ. Terentius Varro Atacinus (from Atax, a river in Gallia Narbonensis, his native country) composed in several styles of poetry. His satires may be inferred from this passage to have been failures. He must not be confounded with the learned Varro Reatinus. He was born B. C. 82. Quintil. X. 1, says,—'Atacinus Varro in iis per quæ nomen adeptus est inter-'pres operis alieni non spernendus quidem: verum ad augendam facultatem 'parum locuples.'

53. i. e. "Does your favourite Lucilius find nothing to alter in Accius?" Comis was evidently (v. 65) the popular epithet in the mouth of the admirers of Lucilius.

54. Gravitate minores, i. e. "undignified."

55. Non ut majore, "not as if he were superior to those whom he blames," (though he can see their defects.)

58. Magis factos, i. e. "more finished." Comp. 'facta quodammodo oratio,' Cic. ad Brut. VIII. 30; de Orat. III. 48, (184.) Comp. 'factus imperator,' Cic. Ac. Qu. 4, Proœm. Plautus even uses a comparative, 'factius,' Trin. II. III. 6.

59. Pedibus quid claudere, i. e. "to make verses that would scan." Sat. II. I. 28; I. IV. 40.

61. Etrusci.....Cassi, a bad poet, not to be confounded with the Cassius of Epist. I. IV. 3.

63. i. e. "He wrote books enough, with their cases, to serve for his funeral pile."

64. Ambustum, prop. "burnt round," i. e. "set on fire, scorched." 'Ridicule pro combustum.' Bent. 'Consulto mitius verbum elegit, ne nimis rem exaggeraret, non combustum.' Orell. (Can the story be a jest, developed out of the double sense of the adj. ferventius?)

65. Limatior. The metaphor of 'a fayre filed tongue' is in Spenser, F. Q. II. I. 3. Cp. Ov. ex Pont. I. V. 15,—

'Plurima cerno,
'Me quoque qui feci judice, digna lini.'

. . . . . .

'Scilicet incipiam lima mordacius uti,
'Et sub judicium singula verba vocem?'

Cp. Ars P. 291. So κατερρινημένος, Arist. Ran. 920.

66. Quam.....auctor, i. e. "Grant that he has elegance and ease, and even more "smoothness than you could expect from the author of a new and untried style "of poetry." Lucilius is termed auctor, as in v. 48 inventor; (compare below, Sat. II. I. 63;) and such he was, both as to the form and the subject matter of his Satires. Those of Ennius had been composed in every kind of metre, and were wholly irregular; and in their subject they were principally a delineation of daily life: but Lucilius wrote only in hexameter verse, and apparently (like Horace and Juvenal) dealt with peculiarities of character, with vices, and with persons. (Some editors have interpreted auctor of Ennius; but there are great objections to this.)

68. Dilatus. So Ovid, Metam. XIII. 518,—

'Quid, di crudeles, nisi quo nova funera cernam,
'Vivacem differtis ænum?' ("Why do you lengthen out her life?")

71. Vivos...ungues, "to the quick." Cp. Pers. I. 106.

72. Stilum vertas, "you must alter," &c. The stilus was blunted at the one end, so as to obliterate the writing on the waxen tablet when needed.

75. This would be the fate of a popular poet. Cp. Epist. I. XX. 17; and Pers. I. 29.

77. Arbuscula, a female mime or reciter (see on v. 18,) extolled by Cic. ad Att. IV. XV. 6.

78. Cimex, "a bug."

ib. Pantilius, one of Horace's Dunciad. So Fannius, Sat. I. IV. 21.

82. Octavius, historian and poet.

83. Viscorum...uterque, the two sons of Vibius Viscus, a wealthy eques.

84. Ambitione relegata, i. e. "without flattery." Comp. the phrase per ambitionem ="to curry favour." Liv. III. 47; XXVIII. 40.

86. Bibule, Servi. Unknown. Furni. Caius Furnius, an historian.

91. Jubeo plorare. Gr. οἰμώζειν κελεύω, equivalent to abite in malam rem.

92. I, puer=puer ad mamum. Horace bids his amanuensis (cp. dictabam, E. I. X. 49) add this Satire to the rest, and complete the Book.

Q. HORATI FLACCI SATIRAE.

LIBER SECUNDUS.

SATIRE I.

THE second book opens with a kind of apology for the practice of satiric composition. It takes the form of a consultation with the old lawyer Trebatius Testa, whose hints and cautions are given with much humour, and some allusion to his peculiarities, as in vv. 8, 9.

Trebatius recommends, first, the abandoning composition, or secondly, recourse to a different style of poetry, e. g. epic or descriptive. The poet replies, that his instinct for verse is irrepressible, yet that he is incapable of a higher flight. (Compare Epist. II. 1. 250, sqq.) He defends himself by asserting his freedom from all malice, and his fairness of purpose; a resolution to attack no one unprovoked, though he will defend himself, (v. 39, sqq.) He is like his own native town in this (Venusia, v. 36), having been colonised originally for a defence upon the frontier. Finally, he recurs (v. 62) to the example of Lucilius, whom he had mentioned before as his model (v. 29, sqq.); and is confident of finding for himself the support and friendship with which Scipio and Lælius honoured and encouraged him.

(Pope has imitated this Satire, and the Second and Sixth.)

4. Deduci. Pope has preserved the metaphor,—'Lord Fanny spins a thousand such a day.'

ib. Trebati. C. Trebatius Testa, well known through his intimacy with Cicero. See the Ep. ad Fam. VII. v., and indeed the whole book.

5. Præscribe, a word used technically of juridical rules. Orelli quotes Cic. Orat. 41, (141),—Præscriptionum cautionumque præceptio.'

7. Optimum erat, "it were best; it would be the best way." Gr. κρεῖττον ἦν (as in Arist. Nub. 1215.) Cp. Livy, XXX. 29,—'Optimum quidem fuerat,' etc.

ib. Ter...transnanto...habento. These terminations are proper to a formal legal style of injunction; and in the rule itself is a sly allusion to the old lawyer's love of the water, and of good living: for which traits see Cic. ad Fam. VII. X. 2,—'Studiosissimus homo natandi;' and VII. XXII., 'inter scyphos,' etc.

13. Deficiunt. Cp. Ov. Fast. I. 123,—'Deficit ingenium, majoraque viribus urgent.'

14. Fracta...cuspide. This is said by the Schol. to be an allusion to the device adopted by Marius against the Cimbri. See Plutarch's Life of C. Marius, 25.

16. Poteras scribere, lit. "you might have described." But, as expressing a suggestion or supposition, cp. Ars. P. 328,—'poteras dixisse,' "suppose you say, or have said." Cp. Virg. Ecl. I. 80 (with Conington's note); and Ov. Met. I. 679.

18. Dextro tempore. Cp. 'Quis rebus dexter modus,' Virg. Æn. IV. 294. So in Æschylus, P. V. 378,— ὀργῆς νοσούσης εἰσὶν ἰατροὶ λόγοι;

ἐάν τις ἐν καιρῷ γε μαλθάσσῃ κέαρ.

22. Pantolabus is said to be a name made up from πᾶν λαβεῖν.

24. Saltat. See the Roman idea of this in Cic. pro Muren. VI. 13.

ib. Icto. Ov. Rem. Am. 146.

25. Numerusque lucernis. So Juv. Sat. VI. 305,—'Geminis consurgit mensa lucernis.' Cp. Ov. Art. Am. 764. So Pentheus (under the influence of his guide Bacchus) says (as in Virg. Æn. IV. 470),— καὶ μὴν ὁρᾶν μοι δύο μὲν ἡλίους δοκῶ δισσὰς δὲ Θήβας. Eurip. Bacch. 918.

27. Cp. Ter. Phorm. II. III. 14,—'Quot homines, tot sententiæ, suus cuique mos.' Cp. Pers. V. 52.

29. i. e. "A greater man than either of us."

31. Cesserat, al. gesserat, which Gesner explains by supplying as an accusative case vitam, from vita in v. 34. But Latin usage would seem to favour the other reading. There is no more frequent or favourite phrase for "good or ill success" than bene or male cedere.

33. Votiva...tabella. Cp. Cic. N. D. III. 37, (89.)

34. Senis, "the old poet." Cp. above, Sat. I. x. 67, 'seniorum.' Cp. Pers. I. 124, 'prægrandi sene' (said of Aristophanes); Virg. Ecl. VI. 70. Orelli quotes Cic de Cl. Orat. 10, (39.)

Lucilius is said to have died at the early age of 46. Much doubt, however, has been thrown upon the statement.

34. Anceps, i. e. 'dubius sum.' Schol. 'Malim ancipitem interpretari cum de 'quo ambigitur sive incertum est;' ut Liv. XXXI. 12, 'incertus.' Cp. XXVII. '37; XXX. 35.' Orell.

Some take anceps for the neut. gen., comparing the usage of incertum in Liv. XXXI. 41, and Plin. N. H. XXXVI. 15, (24.) But it is unlikely that an adjective which does not show its gender by its termination would be so used; and agreement with the person is any way more idiomatic.

36. The colony of Venusia was sent out B. C. 291, towards the end of the third Samnite war.

37. Quo ne, "that...not," like 'ut ne;' 'rarissimo usu,' Orell.

ib. Per vacuum, i. e. "by an undefended part," that the frontier might not be open to the invasion of enemies.

ib. Romano. The sing. is used in a collective sense. Comp. Epod. VII. 6.

38. Quod=aliquod.

39. Incuteret, "menaced." An unusual phrase for inferret. 'Dictum est ut incutere verbera, terrorem, metum; sic incutere minas, Ov. Trist. I. XI. 42.' [O.]

40. Veluti...ensis. Cp. Cic. de Orat. 1,—'Arma quibus vel tectus ipse esse possis.'

43. Ut pereat. Gr. ὡς ἀπόλοιτο. (The commentators compare Call. Fragm. 509, translated by Catull. LXVI. 48,—'Jupiter ut Chalybon omne genus pereat!')

ib. Cp. Sueton. Caligula, 53,—'Peroraturus stricturum se lucubrationis telum minabatur.'

45. Cp. Ter. Andria, Prol. 22,— 'Dehinc ut quiescant porro moneo, et desinant
'Maledicere, malefacta ne noscant sua.'

46. Cp. Æsch. S. c. Th. 7,—ὑμνοῖθ' ὑπ' ἀστῶν φροιμίοις πολυῤῥάθοις.
Popo's translation,—
'Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
'Slides into verse, and hitches in a rhyme;
'Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
'And the sad burden of a merry song.'

47. Cervius, an informer. Urnam, i. e. "the judicial urn." Virg. Æn. VI. 432; Juv. XIII. 4.

48. Albuti...venenum. Albutius was said to have poisoned his wife (or his mother.) So the Scholiasts.

49. Turius, a corrupt judge. Siquid...certes. Certo, prop. a neuter verb, takes here an acc. case of the pronoun: it is used passively with a nom. case in Sat. II. v. 27; as militor in Epod. I. 23.

51. Sic collige mecum (cp. Epist. II. I. 119), "you may see (viz. from the following "instances) how each creature adopts the weapon he finds most effective, "and that by a law of nature."

52. Intus, i. e. "by instinct," (as described in Lucret. V. 1033.)

53. Scævæ. Scæva was infamous for matricide; the means used being (vitiato melle) "poisoned honey."

ib. Vivacem...matrem. Ov. Fast. II. 625.

60. Ut sis vitalis metuo. Taken from Homer. Il. σ. 95—ὠκύμορος δή μοι, τέκος, ἔσσεαι αἴ κ' ἀγορεύεις.

62. Frigore...feriat, i. e. "chill you by cold neglect." Cp. Pers. I. 109,— 'Vide sis ne majorum tibi forte
'Limina frigescant.'

ib. Quid, cum est Lucilius? Cp. Cic. ad Fam. XII. XVI. 3,—'Deinde qui magis 'hoc Lucilio licuerit assumere libertatis quam nobis?' etc.

64. Per ora. Here, "in the eyes of all." Ov. Trist. IV. II. 48.

65. Lælius. Caius Lælius Sapiens. His cognomen is expressed in the circumlocution of v. 72. He was the intimate friend of the younger Africanus, as his father had been of the elder. To him the de Amicitia is dedicated.

ib. Qui duxit, etc. Scipio Africanus Minor (under him Lucilius had served as an eques at Numantia). Cp. Ov. Fast. I. 593,—'Africa victorem de se vocat.'

67. Metello. Qu. Cæcilius Metellus Macedonicus. He was of the opposite party to Scipio (Cic. de Off. I. XXV. 7), yet said of him at his death, 'Ite, filii, celebrate 'exsequias; numquam civis majoris funus videbitis.' Plin. N. H. VII. 14.

68. Lupo. Luc. Cornel. Lentulus Lupus. Cic. N. D. I. 23, (63) quotes these verses from Lucilius,—
'Tubulus si Lucius umquam
'Si Lupus aut Carbo Neptuni filius,...ut ait Lucilius,...putasset
'Esse Deos, tam perjurus aut tam impurus fuisset?'

Lupus is called by the Scholiast 'princeps senatus.' Both he and Metellus are examples of primores populi, and the general meaning is,—"Were the "patrons of Lucilius, seeing that he satirised men of the greatest eminence "and power, fearful for themselves, or offended by his freedom? No, their "friendship was constant and unreserved."

71. Compare the description put into Lælius' mouth by Cicero,—'Una domus, 'idem victus isque communis...remoti ab oculis populi omne otiosum tempus 'contrivimus.' De Amic. XXVII. 103.

71. A volgo et scena, i. e. "from being in public." Cp. Cic. ad Brut. Ep. I. IX. 2, "Tibi nunc populo et scenæ, ut dicitur, serviendum est.'

73. Cp. Cic. de Orat. II. 6, (22.)

ib. Discincti. A compound, the contrary of præcinctus and succinctus, nearly "in undress," i. e. without ceremony or reserve.

74. Olus, i. e. "their frugal meal." See Cic. de Fin. II. 8, (quoting Lucilius),—'O lapathe, ut jactare nec es sati' cognitu' qui sis. In quo Lælius, clamores 'sophos ille solebat Edere, compellans gumias ex ordine nostros;' (and adding)—'Præclare Lælius et recte 'sophos.'"

77. Fragili...solido, "and when thinking to strike its tooth into a soft morsel, will "come upon a hard one;" i. e. when expecting to find an easy prey, it will find it has met its match.

ib. Fragili=quod frangi potest, e. g. as a nut between the teeth. Or perhaps the metaphor is drawn from the 'Viper and the File.'

79. Diffindere. The general sense of this is clear,—"I cannot object to, I agree with, what you say." Diffindere is on the whole the most probable reading: it is a legal term, and therefore in character. Diem or rem diffindere was equivalent to differre; hence Gesner makes the sense to be,—"the case is "so clear, I need not defer judgment; I can decide at once." But Fea (with whom Orelli agrees) considers that, though the word itself may have been suggested by technical usage, it may be intended to have here a different and a commoner sense, viz. "to reject, or put aside."

Other editions have diffingere, "to undo or alter;" defringere, "to break off a piece," in allusion to the metaphor fragili.

(Defindere, defingere, defigere, diffigere, diffidere, diffundere, are instances of the ingenuity of correctors.)

80. Ut may be taken either with monitus or caveas; the latter seems the most natural construction. "That you may be safe from any evil consequences "from ignorance of the law, (remember)" etc.

82. Si mala, etc. The terms of the law in the Twelve Tables are quoted by Cicero, de Rep. IV. 10,—'XII. tabulæ cum perpaucas res capite sanxissent in 'his hanc quoque sanciendam putaverunt, siquis occentavisset sive carmen con-'didisset quod infamiam faceret flagitiumve alteri.'

ib. Jus...judiciumque. See article 'Judex' in Dict. Ant.; and Adam's R. A. p. 246,—'The things done in court before the appointment of judices were 'properly said in jure fieri, after that in judicio; but this distinction is not al-'ways observed.' Jus judiciumque was seemingly an indefinite double phrase (cp. Liv. XXXIX. 24); but Orelli paraphrases it thus,—'Lex Cornelia lata est, 'et actio injuriarum in eum datur.'

83. Mala. Used punningly. Cp. the Greek Epigram of Palladas,— καλῶς εἰπεῖν Ἀττικόν ἐστι μέλι.

85. Latraverit. Bentley reads laceraverit, without advantage or authority. Latro has an acc. case in Epod. V. 58. The metaphor is found Epod. VI. 1; and in Liv. XXXVIII. 54,—'Cato allatravit Scipionis magnitudinem.'

ib. Integer ipse, "being himself clear from fault," on the principle of Sat. I. III. 25, etc.

86. "The charges will be quashed by the general laugh; you will get off." (Missus=dimissus, not necessarily absolutus.)

ib. Risu solvere. Cp. Quintil. V. X. 67,—'Cum risu tota res solvitur;' and see the quot. on Sat. I. X. 14. With the passage generally, comp. Arist. Vesp. 1257, sqq.—

ἢ γὰρ παρῃτήσαντο τὸν πεπονθότα ἢ λόγον ἔλεξας αὐτὸς ἀστεῖόν τινα
.....κᾆτ' ἐς γέλων
τὸ πρᾶγμ' ἔτρεψας ὥστ' ἀφεὶς σ' ἀποίχεται.

86. Tabulæ is variously interpreted: as, 1. 'Laws' (cp. Duodecim Tabulæ.) 2. The tabulæ or libelli accusatoris, i. e. 'the indictment brought.' 3. (adopted by Orelli from Matthiæ,) "The tablets on which the jury gave in their verdicts" (tabellæ judiciariæ), i. e. "the finding (or sentence) of the Court will come to nothing." 4. "The Court itself" (subsellia judicum); but there is no authority given for this meaning; and "to break up the Court" would be rather an equivalent, than an exact version.

SATIRE II.

This is a Satire aimed at the extravagance and excess of epicures, with a passing sarcasm (vv. 55–63) upon the opposite extreme. The whole finishes with a description of contented simplicity in the person of Ofella, evidently a neighbour and friend of the poet's, and who, in common with him and others, had lost his property in the civil wars, but who had been temperate in his prosperity, and was now, therefore, resolute and cheerful in adversity. Horace professes to be delivering his opinions, in the fear (as some have suggested) lest they should be too cutting in their truth for his patrons to endure.

3. Rusticus, etc. Compare the description of "a plain, blunt man" in Eurip. Orest. 918—922.

ib. Abnormis, "without rule (norma); artless; self-taught."

ib. Crassa Minerva, i. e. "of strong natural sense." Crassus is the contrary of subtilis ("fine-drawn" as a thread, and in metaph. "refined.") Cic. de Amic. v. opposes agamus pingui Minerva to subtilius disserunt, and the theoretical wisdom of philosophers to the practical wisdom of Fabricius, Curius, and others.

4. Compare Persius, S. IV. 30,—

'Ecce inter pocula quærunt
'Romulidæ saturi quid dia poemata narrent.'

5, 6. Hooker, E. P. V. II. 1,—'How should the brightness of wisdom shine, where 'the windows of the soul are of very set purpose closed?'

10. Vel. There is an anacoluthon here; vel has no word connected with it. The sentence should run thus,—'Leporem sectatus...vel ludo fatigatus,' etc.

ib. Romane...militia, i. e. "hunting." Cp. Epist. I. XVIII. 49, and the complaint in Carm. III. XXIV. 53, sq.; and I. VII. 3, sq.

ib. Fatigat, "is too much for you."

11. Pila. 'Usus equi nunc est, levibus nunc luditur armis,
'Nunc pila, nunc celeri volvitur orbe trochus.' Ov. Trist. III. XII. 19.

13. Pete cedentem aëra disco may be taken as in a parenthesis. "Play quoits, if you prefer it."

15. Mella Falerno...diluta=mulsum, "mead, honey-wine." Gr. οἰνόμελι.

16. Ne biberis answers in construction to sperne. "Scorn plain things (if you can,) "refuse to drink anything but Hymettian," etc.

18. Latrantem. οὐ γάρ τι στυγερῇ ἐπὶ γαστέρι κύντερον ἄλλο· (i. e. "nothing is more importunate than hunger.") Hom. Od. η. 216. So νηδὺς ὑλακτοῦσα, Anthol. P. VI. 89 (in Eid. and Scott's Lex. v. ὑλακτέω); and see Munro's note, Lucr. II. 17.

ib. Unde.....partum, "How could this property be gained by, or belong to, such simple food?"='unde partum est ut leniat,' etc.?

19. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Qu. v. 34,—'Quis hoc non videt, desideriis omnia ista condiri? 'Darius in fuga...negavit umquam se bibisse jucundius.'

20. Pulmentaria quære sudando. Cp. Cic. de Fin. II. 28,—'Cibi condimentum esse famem, potionis sitim;' and Tusc. Qu. v. 34.

22. Scarus...lagois. The scarus (a species of the labrus) was a fish highly prized as a delicacy at Rome. It is found in shoals in the Mediterranean Sea. The lagois is probably the same as the attagen.

ib. Peregrina, "migratory."

25. Vanis rerum, i. e. by a mere outside. Sat. II. VIII. 83,—'fictis rerum.'

ib. Veneat auro. 'Magis illa juvant quæ pluris emuntur.' Juv. XI. 16.

29. Hac magis illa, i. e. vesceris hac potius quam illa, "yet, though there is no real "superiority, you eat this bird in preference to that." Bentley makes hac to be governed by distat, "though there is no excellence (lit. difference) in this "meat more than in that, yet you are led by the difference of look."

31. Unde datum. 'Unde traditum hunc intellectum habes?' Schol. "By what faculty can you discern where your fish was caught? whether in the river, or the sea,—high up the stream, or at the mouth?" The phrase is copied by Persius, v. 124. Comp. Ov. Fast. VI. 103,—'Unde datas habeat vires' ("whence she derives her power.")

ib. Lupus=λάβραξ, "the Basse;" a fish of the perch tribe, common on our coasts, and in the Mediterranean. (See Yarrell on Fishes.)

ib. Tiberinus an alto, etc. Comp. Juv. IV. 140. Columella supplies a commentary on this,—'Multorum gula subtilior...erudita palata fastidire docuit fluvialem 'lupum.'—R. R. VIII. 16.

32. Captus hiet. Hiet is not a mere redundancy for sit. We may construe thus,—"Whether this fish was alto captus, which is gaping on the table before you." (There is a tolerably parallel instance of poetic usuage in Virg. Æn. VI. 471,—

'Quam si dura silex, aut stet Marpesia cautes.'

Mr. Conington calls stet a poetical substitute for sit; but he gives the verb a meaning of its own in his version,—"Than if she had the fixedness of flint or crag.")

33. Trilibrem mullum. Juv. IV. 15,—

'Mullum sex milibus emit,
'Æquantem sane paribus sestertia libris.'

ib. Mullum, "the red surmullet." 'Mulli barbati in piscinis,' Cic. ad Att. II. I. 7.

34. In singula, i. e. "a piece for each guest."

36. Illis.....his. The rule is, that, of two persons or things, hic refers to the last mentioned, ille to the more remote,—a rule seemingly violated here, for illis is referred to lupos, his to mullum. But the construction is accounted for on the ground that the mulli are principally in the speaker's mind, and nearest to him in idea. This is the explanation of Jahn on Epist. I. XVII. 19.

40. Gula=gulo; res pro persona. Cp. Juv. I. 140.

ib. At vos. 'At indignantis est,' Orelli.

41. Coquite. Said ironically,—"Come and dress (i. e. taint) their viands. Yet "(why do I bid you do so?) they are tainted (i. e. distasteful) owing to "excess" (mala copia.)

42. Putet...recens. A kind of oxymoron. "Though freshly caught, it is loathed (putidus) by the jaded and sickly appetite." Juv. II. 121,—

'Divitibus cenandi nulla voluptas;
'Nil rhombus, nil dama sapit; putere videntur
'Unguenta atque rosæ, latos nisi sustinet orbes
'Grande ebur,' etc.

44. Inulas, "Elicampane." 'Inulas amaras,' Sat. II. VIII. 51.

47. Galloni. Publius Gallonius. Cic. de Fin. II. 8, quotes the verse of Lucilius upon him,—

'O Publi, o gurges, Galloni; es homo miser, inquit;
'Cenasti in vita numquam bene, cum omnia in ista
'Consumis squilla atque acipensere cum decimano.'

ib. Acipensere, "a sturgeon." Martial, XIII. 91.

50. Auctor...prætorius. Sempronius Rufus, notorious for his epicurism, and repulsed on account of it, when suing for the prætorship. Prætorius is a sarcastic joke upon his failure. He was the inventor (auctor) of this new delicacy,—a dish of storks; and the following epigram connected it with his repulse (Obs. conditor is from condio):

'Ciconiarum Rufus iste conditor!
'Hic est duobus elegantior Plancis:
'Suffragiorum puncta non tulit septem.
'Ciconiarum populus ultus est mortem.'

51. Edixerit, scil. tamquam prætor; another hit at Rufus. Edico was the regular word for conveying the prætor's decree.

55. Pravum. 'Ita, ut pravus fias,' Orelli. (Bentley reads pravus, as in Sat. I. IV. 79.)

ib. Avidienus. Unknown except from this passage.

56. Dictum, al. ductum, which Orelli looks on as a mere gloss. In favour of dictum, he quotes Liv. I. 1,—'Cui Ascanium parentes dixere nomen.' But Ovid, a great imitator of Horace, is cited on the other side, Fast. I. 467,— 'Nomen habes a carmine ductum.'

57. Quinquennes, i. e. so old as to be spoilt.

ib. Est, i. e. edit.

58. Mutatum, "on the turn." So, vitio mutaverit, Sat. II. VIII. 50.

59. Licebit.....albatus celebret, i. e. "although he makes a great show of celebrating them."

60. Repotia, "the day after a marriage" (or, indeed, any entertainment.) Gr. ἐπίβδα.

61. Albatus, i. e. "with a new or newly-cleaned toga." Pers. II. 40.

ib. Ipse.....instillat. The emphasis is on both words. "He himself pours out "the rancid oil drop by drop; and the old vinegar (=mutatum vinum) is the "only thing of which he is not chary."

ib. Bilibri. A congius is estimated (see Dict. Ant. art. 'Libra') to contain 10lbs. weight. At this proportion a cornu bilibre would slightly exceed a sextarius.

62. Non parcus. In some copies non largus is read. [G.] approves it: 'ironiam haud agnovit,' says [O.] It has the appearance of being a mere correction, founded on mistake arising from the involved nature of the sentence; for at first sight the clause seems naturally to attach itself to the preceding cornu... instillat. But the use of the word aceti forbids this, and shows that the clause is a return to the mention of vinum, in v. 58. 'In eo solo non avarus,' Schol.

64. Aiunt. Gr. τὸ λεγόμενον; or (as in Aristophanes), τοῦτ' ἐκεῖνο.

65. Mundus erit qua non, etc. Bentl. and Orelli concur in supporting qua for qui. The sense need not be affected by it. Qui might be=quippe qui. Qua is= eatenus qua, or (as it is in Sat. I. II. 123) hactenus ut. "He (i. e. sapiens) will "be neat so as not to disgust by meanness, and in neither direction will be ex- "travagant in style of living." (Cp. Carm. II. XVI. 14, and note.) Mundus expresses the character between the prodigal and the miserly.

66. In neutram may be compared with in neutrum conspiciendus (i. e. "remarkable neither for wealth nor want,") Ov. Trist. II. 114. Cp. C. Nepos, in Vit. Attici, XIII.

ib. Cultus is the gen. after miser.

ib. Miser may denote the wasteful, equally with the stingy. See note on v. 46, where it is an epithet for Gallonius, and Cicero's comment in continuation,—'Recte ergo is negat umquam bene cenasse Gallonium; recte miserum; cum 'præsertim in eo omne studium consumeret; quem libenter (i. e. "to his liking") 'cenasse nemo negat.'

(Others take mundus as agreeing with victus; others, as defining the tenuis of v. 53, i. e. "he will be the pattern of frugal simplicity, who avoids meanness and waste.")

67. Albuti. One Albutius was mentioned Sat. II. I. 48; whether the same or not, is unknown.

ib. Munia, "duties, offices of life or position." 'Belli pacisque munia, Liv.; 'munia candidatorum,' Cic.

68. Simplex, εὐήθης, "good, easy man."

70. Cp. Hesiod, ἔργ. καὶ ἡμ. 41.

76. Lenta...pituita, "clinging phlegm."

77. Desurgat, "rises at the end of."

ib. Dubia. A phrase from Terence, Phorm. II. I. 28,—

79. Divinæ part. aurœ. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 730, 746; and Cic. Tusc. Qu. V. 13,—'Humanus animus decerptus ex mente divina;' and de Divin. I. 49. Xen. Mem. IV. 3,—καὶ ἀνθρώπου γε ψυχὴ εἴπερ τι καὶ ἄλλο τῶν ἀνθρωπίνων τοῦ θείου μετέχει.

80. Cp. Virg. Geor. III. 527,—

.....'Non illis epulæ nocuere repostæ;
'Frondibus et victu pascuntur simplicis herbæ;
'Pocula sunt fontes liquidi atque exercita cursu
'Flumina, nec somnos abrumpit cura salubres.'

Cp. 'somnum plebis,' E. I. VII. 35.

84. Ubique. For que, Bentley plausibly conjectures ve. Heindorf adopts it,—'ve enim part. disjunctiva cum seu et sive tertium locum obtinere solet.' Carm. IV. II. 13; I. XXII. 7. If ubique is the right reading, can it stand for ubicumque, as quandoque for quandocumque?

87. Comp. Xen. Mem. II. I. 31,—ἀπόνως μὲν λιπαροὶ διὰ νεότητος τρεφόμενοι...τὰ μὲν ἡδέα ἐν τῇ νεότητι διαδραμόντες τὰ δὲ χαλεπὰ εἰς τὸ γῆρας ἀποθέμενοι.

92. Integrum, "fresh;" opposed to vitiatum and rancidum, "high."

93. Prima, sc. primæva. Cp. Sat. I. III. 99. "Would that I had lived in that heroic age!" Possibly the poet remembered Hesiod's wish, ἔργ. καὶ ἡμ. 175, with which he enters on his description of the fifth age. Cp. Catull. LXIV. 22,—'O nimis optato sæclorum tempore nati Heroes.'

94. Das...famæ, a phrase borrowed by Tacitus, Ann. I. 7.

ib. Carmine gratior, "sweeter than any music." Cp. Xen. Mem. II. I. 31,—τοῦ πάντων ἡδίστου ἀκούσματος, ἐπαίνου σεαυτῆς, and Cic. pro Archia, 9, (20),—'Themistoclem.....dixisse aiunt quum ex eo quæreretur quod acroama aut 'cujus vocem libentissime audiret: Ejus a quo sua virtus optime prædicaretur.' So in Sheridan's Pizarro, Act III. Sc. III, Elvira says, 'My ears (were framed) to own no music but the thrilling records of his praise.'

99. As, laquei pretium. Plautus, Pseud. I. i. 86,— 'Quid de drachma facere vis? C. Restim volo
'Mihi emere. Ps. Quamobrem? C. Qui me faciam pensilem.'
Cp. Lucian, Timon, xx.

ib. Trausius, a spendthrift. For the sentiment, cp. Epist. I. xviii. 29; Juven. xi. 1,— 'Atticus eximie si cenat lautus habetur;
'Si Rutilus, demens.'

103. Eur. Inc. Fr. 39,—χρυσοῦ σὲ πλήθων τούσδε δ' οὐ χαίρειν χρεων;
The high morality of this protest against a merely selfish, and for a beneficial, expenditure, is to be marked. But any enlarged system of liberality, or institution of homes or hospitals for the helpless, was a thing reserved for the Christian age.

107. Uterne. A double interrogative. Cp. Sat. II. iii. 295, 317,—Quone; Quantane. (It seems to be emphatic,—"Which, I ask, etc." ?)

109. Cp. Eur. Antiope, 33,— ὅσοι μὲν σαρκὸς εἰς εὐεξίαν ἀσκοῦσι βίοτον, ἦν σφαλῶσι χρημάτων, κακοὶ πολῖται, δεῖ γὰρ ἄνδρ' εἰθισμένον ἀκόλαστον ἦθος γαστρὸς ἐν ταυτῷ μένειν.

111. This is the moral of Æsop's Boar sharpening his tusks; but so Ἀρετὴ is described by Prodicus as ἀγαθὴ συλλήπτρια τῶν ἐν εἰρήνῃ πόνων, βεβαία δὲ τῶν ἐν πολέμῳ σύμμαχος ἔργων, Xen. Mem. II. i. Does any one need to be reminded of Canning's speech at Plymouth in 1823,—'The resources created by peace are means of war,'—and his magnificent illustration of it?

113. Latius usum. So, Juv. xiv. 234,—'Indulgent sibi latius.'

114. Metato, "allotted out to the new settlers" (in this case to Umbrenus) by the Commissioners. Cp. Propert. IV. i. 129,— ....'Tua cum multi versarent rura juvenci.
'Abstulit exultas pertica tristis opes.'
Pertica, the "measuring rod"=decempeda, in Cic. Phil. xiv. 4, (10.) Ofella's condition was similar to that of Mœris in Virgil, Ecl. ix. 2.

115. Mercede, i. e. for the pittance allowed him. He was no longer owner of the soil, but a tenant.

119. Cp. Arist. Pax, 1140,— οὐ γὰρ ἔσθ' ἥδιον ἢ τυχεῖν μὲν ἤδη 'σπαρμένα,

Εἰπέ μοι, τί τηνικαῦτα δρῶμεν, ὦ Κωμαρχίδη;
ἐμπιεῖν ἔμοιγ' ἀρέσκει, τοῦ θεοῦ δρῶντος καλῶς.

120. Bene erat, "we fared well." Cp. Gr. εὐωχέω, εὐωχία, from εὖ ἔχειν.

122. Duplice ficu, "split figs."

123. Culpa...magistra, i. e. "subject to a rule of forfeits." This we may suppose to have been a rustic substitute for the election of a Symposiarch How or for what the forfeits would be exacted, can only be guessed. The terms of course were settled at the time.

124. Venerata Ceres, i. e. libations in her honour. Venerata. Used passively, as in Virg. Æn. iii. 460.

128. Nituistis. As nitidus, Epist. I. iv. 15. Ut, "since."

129. Propriæ, i. e. in perpetuum possidendæ. Sat. II. vi. 5; Epist. II. ii. 172. Cp. οὗτοι τὰ χρήματ' ἴδια κέκτηνται βροτοί. Eurip. Phœn. 555. So Lucian, Charon, 20,—ἀνάγκη τὸν μὲν γυμνὸν οἴχεσθαι, τὴν οἰκίαν δὲ καὶ τὸν ἀγρὸν καὶ τὸ χρυσίον ἀεὶ ἄλλων εἶναι καὶ μεταβάλλειν τοὺς δεσπότας. See the Spectator, No. 289.

133. Lucian, Epigr. in Anthol.— οἴεται, εἰμὶ δ' ὅλως οὐδενὸς ἀλλὰ Τύχης.

SATIRE III.

A Satire upon the vices and follies of men, classed according to the Stoic formula under the head of insanity. Damasippus, supposed to be the same mentioned by Cicero as a connoisseur, of expensive tastes, is the speaker. He is represented as invading Horace in the retirement of his villa, and upbraiding him with want of industry and perseverance. He then, after touching on his own history, and his adoption of the philosophical tenets and habits of the Stoic sect, in continuation 'docet insanire omnes' (v. 81), and ends with a satiric description of the foibles of the poet himself. The objects of general satire are specified in vv. 78, 79. Avarice is taken first (vv. 82—160): then Ambition (vv. 165, sqq.): then Luxury (vv. 224, sqq.): then Superstition (vv. 281—295.)

1. Scribis. See Lachm. on Lucr. II. 27, who impugns this reading.

2. Membranam, "the parchment" for the final and revised copy. 'Croceæ membrana tabellæ,' Juv. VII. 23. In Pers. III. 10, the bicolor positis membrana capillis (i. e. "the ornamented vellum") is distinguished from the chartæ, or materials for a rough copy.

4. Dignum sermone. Gr. ἄξιον λόγου, ἀξιόλογον.

5. Saturnalibus. See art. 'Saturnalia' in Dict. of Antiqq. This ancient "Carnival" lasted during the 17th and two following days of December (16, 15, 14, Kal. Januarias). The freedom of it is alluded to below in Sat. VII. 4.

ib. Sobrius. Cp. 'Vinum toto nescire Decembri,' Juv. VII. 97.

7. Cp. Pers. III. 13,—

.....'Queritur crassus calamo quod pendeat humor,
'Nigra quod infusa vanescat sepia lympha.'

ib. Laborat, "suffers," either as being blamed or beaten, according to the sign of laboriousness, in Pers., I. 106,—'pluteum cædit.'

8. Iratis natus...dis. So S. 1. V. 98; II. VII. 14. Compare, apart from the comic application of the phrase, Hom. Od. γ. 28,—οὐ σε θεῶν ἀέκητι γενέσθαι.

9. Multa et præclara. Gr. πολλὰ καὶ καλά; Eng. "many fine things." The insertion of the copula belongs both to the Latin and Greek idiom.

11. Platona. It is a question whether the philosopher or the comic poet is here meant. The mention of Menander and Eupolis naturally suggests the latter. The former will, however, seem most probably intended, if we compare Ars Poet. 310. If so, each of these four names will represent a distinct variety or school of authorship: 1. Philosophy: 2. The New Comedy: 3. The Old Comedy: 4. The Elegiac and Lyric poetry. This seems an additional argument in his favour.

14. Siren='Blanda, sed impudens, conciliatricula, Cic. pro Sest. IX. 21.' [O.] Cp. Eurip. Andr. 936,— κλύουσα τοὐσδε Σειρήνων λόγους σοφῶν πανούργων ποικίλων λαλημάτων ἐξηνεμώθην μωρίᾳ.

17. Donent tonsore. The long beard was the badge of his profession of philosophy. See v. 35.

18. Janum ad medium, the money market, the "Change alley" of Rome. (Any archway or covered alley was called a Janus.) Cp. 'Janus summus ab imo,' E. I. I. 54. See the description in Cookesley's Map of Rome, p. 20; adding to the passages there quoted one from Cic. de Off. II. 25, ad fin.

19. Aliena, etc. Ter. Heaut. I. I. 23,—

'Tantumne est ab re tua otii tibi
'Aliena ut cures eaque nihil quæ ad te attinent?'

Plaut. Stich. I. III. 45,—

'Alienas res qui curant studio maxumo,
'Quibus ipsis nulla est res quam procurent sua.'

21. Vafer...Sisyphus. Hom. Il. ζ. 153,—δ' κέρδιστος γένετ' ἀνδρῶν.
For another mention of the antiquities or bronzes of Corinth, cp. 'Ephyrcia æra,' Virg. Geo. II. 464.

23. Callidus, "as a connoisseur." 'Callidi rerum æstimatores,' Cic. Paradox. VI. 3.

27. Morbi. Eng. "mania."

28. Emovit. C. IV. XV. 11; Virg. Æn. VI. 382.

30. Hic='quem nosti,' Or. (See on Sat. I. III. 4, ille.)

32. Insanis et tu, "you too are mad." Et=etiam.

33. Stertinius, a Stoic professor of the day, affectedly extolled v. 296.

36. A...ponte. Cp. Juv. VI. 32,—'Cum tibi vicinum se præbeat Æmilius pons?' (i. e. as one mode of suicide). Fabricio. This bridge (now Ponte di Quattro Capi) led from the Campus Martius to the island in the Tiber. (See Cookesley's Map of Rome, p. 102.)

37. Operto...capite. Cp. Liv. IV. 12,—'Multi ex plebe, spe amissa,.....capitibus obvolutis se in Tiberim præcipitaverunt.' Cp. Shakespeare, J. Cæsar, Act III. Sc. II,—'In his mantle muffling up his face.' Cp. Plutarch in Pericles (story of Anaxagoras).

38. Dexter. Virg. Æn. VIII. 302.

45. Autumat, from avis. Cp. æstumo from æs. 'As augury and weighing were 'the two most usual means of forming a judgment, both autumo and æstumo 'signify "to judge."' Varron. p. 314.

53. Caudæ trahat="is an object of ridicule." The periphrasis, though substituted for sit, expresses more. The sense is,—"If you concede to him that "you are insanus in a certain sense, still he is no wiser, and he is equally "ridiculous."

54. Ter. Andr. IV. I. 14; and cp. τῶν μαινομένων τοὺς μὲν οὐδὲ τὰ δεινὰ δεδιέναι, τοὺς δὲ καὶ τὰ μὴ φοβερὰ φοβεῖσθαι.—Xen. Mem. I. I. 14.

56. Varum, "diverse." Cp. Pers. VI. 18,— 'Geminos, horoscope, varo

'Producis genio.'

Properly used of crooked, knock-kneed legs; as in Sat. I. III. 47.

57. Amica mater, Gr. φίλη μήτηρ. See on Carm. IV. VII. 19.

60. Fufius, an actor who played the sleeping Ilione in the tragedy of Pacuvius. Being drunk, he (edormiebat) "slept through" his part.
Ilione was daughter of Priam, and married to Polymnestor. When Polydorus was entrusted to her care, she brought him up under the name of her own son Deipylus. This led to his escape, but to her son's death when the Greeks required the king to slay Polydorus. In the play, the ghost of Deipylus (acted by Catienus) appeared to, and implored burial from, Ilione. The opening lines are given in Cic. Tusc. Qu. I. 44.

61. Edormit. An historic present; (the regular construction would require cum edormiret, not edormiit.) So donat, Sat. I. II. 56.

68. Præda quam...Mercurius fert. Gr. ἕρμαιον.

69. Scribe decem, i. e. "draw up an agreement with all the securities Nerius and "Cicuta can devise.....still he (the debtor) slips through your hands, like a "Proteus."

ib. Nerio. Nerius and Perillius (v. 75) were usurers. Cicuta, a nickname of the latter.

72. Malis ridentem alienis. This phrase is adapted from the Homeric γναθμοῖσι γελώων ἀλλοτρίοισι (i.e. they, the suitors, "laughed a forced, unnatural laugh," for it is added) γόον δ' ὄτρυνε θυμός. Odyss. v. 347. In what sense it is adapted, is not so clear. Bothe, after Schol. Cruq., takes it as "pretending not "to laugh; laughing in his sleeve." Gesner, as "laughing at your expense;" i. e. the jest is derived from your embarrassment. Orelli, as "laughing heartily," as in Thucyd. I. 70,—τοῖς σώμασιν ἀλλοτριωτάτοις ὑπὲρ τῆς πόλεως χρῶνται means—"They use their bodies as if they absolutely belonged to "others;" i. e. they expose them freely to danger. Mr. Shilleto, in Journal of Philology, No. XII. p. 317, decides for this last interpretation 'unquestionably.'

73. The description is in Virg. Geor. IV. 407,—'Fiet enim subito sus horridus, 'atraque tigris,' etc.

The Scholiast interprets it by a curious allegory,—'Aper, ferox; avis, fugax; 'saxum et arbor, mutus.'

76. Rescribere. Scribere nummos alicui is "to promise payment;" rescribere, etc., "to pay back;" perscribere, "to give a draft for payment."

77. Togam.....componere, i. e. "to take the attitude of attention."

82. Ellebori, "black hellebore," prescribed as a remedy for madness. Virgil mentions it Geor. III. 451,—'Ellcborosque gravis.' This is properly the Greek name for the drug. See on v. 166. The Latin is veratrum, Lucret. IV. 641; Pers. I. 51.

83. Anticyra (where the drug was procured, comp. Ars P. 300,) was in Phocis, on the coast of the Corinthian gulf. (It was grown also at the Asticyra near the Malian gulf.)

84. Staberius. Unknown. Summam. See v. 90.

86. Damnati, "bound" The word corresponds to the old form found in inscriptions, and quoted by Quintilian, VII. IX. 9,—'Dare damnas esto.'

ib. Epulum, "a funeral banquet." That of Quintus Arrius was most costly. See Cic. in Vatin. 12—14, ...'Cum tot hominum milia accumberent ..... epulo 'magnificentissimo'.....

87. Sive ego, etc. Spoken in the person of Staberius, (or perhaps quoted in substance from his will.)

88. Ne sis, for ne fueris. See Carm I. XXXIII. 1. Comp. Pers. III. 96.

89. Prudentem, i. e. "deliberately; I believe he had a serious meaning in this."

ib. Quid ergo. τί δῆτα; "Well, what did he mean?"

96. Comp. Arist. Plut. 144; and Sophocl. Ἀλωάδ. Fr. 109,—γλώσσῃ σοφὸν τίθησιν εὔμορφόν τ' ἰδεῖν.

97. Etiam. Comp. Cic. Acad. Pr. II. 32,—'Aut etiam aut non respondere,' (i. e. "to answer either yes or no.") See Donaldson, Lat. Gr. 108, b.

98. Et quidquid volet. Imitated by Lucian, Timon, 50,—καὶ γὰρ ῥήτωρ ἄριστος ὁ Τίμων, καὶ τὰ ἄλλα πάντα ὁπόσα ἂν ἐθέλοι.

100. 'Rem narrat Diog. Laert. II. 77.' [O.]

ib. Aristippus, founder of the Cyrenaic sect. The tenor of his philosophy is pourtrayed in Epist. I. I. 18; I. XVII. 14—24.

106. Formas, "lasts."

109. Uti compositis. Cp. Arist. Rhet. I. 5,—τὸ πλουτεῖν ἐστὶν ἐν τῷ χρῆσθαι. μᾶλλον ἢ ἐν τῷ κεκτῆσθαι; and cp. Eurip. Antiopa, Fragm. 32.

111. This is imitated by Ben Jonson, The Fox, Act I. Sc. I.

118. Stragula, adj., "fit for spreading over;" 'pretiosa plumario opere facta,' Schol. 'Argenti vestisque stragulæ quod fuerit,' (i. e. "all the plate and furniture he had,") Cic. Verr. II. I. X. Cp. Ib. II. II. 14. So, 'Nam neque tum plumæ nec stragula picta,' Tibull. I. II. 77. It is also used for a horse's saddle or padding,—'Stragula (neut. pl.) succincti, venator, sume veredi,' Mart. XIV. LXXXVI. Cp. the description of Laertes in his grief,— οὐδέ οἱ εὐναὶ δέμνια καὶ χλαῖναι καὶ ῥήγεα σιγαλόεντα.

. . . . . .
φύλλων κεκλιμένων χθαμαλαὶ βεβλήαται εὐναί. Hom. Odyss. λ. 188.

119. Tinearum epulæ, "where the rust and moth doth corrupt."

120. Eo quod. Cp. with this reason, Shakspeare, in Hamlet, Act. V. Sc. I,—"'Twill 'not be seen in him there: there the men are as mad as he.'

127. Cp. Cic. Parad. VI. 1,—'Quotidie fraudas, decipis, poscis, pacisceris, aufers, eripis'...Cp. Lucian, Timon, 22,—τὰ κατ' ὀλιγον ἐκ πολλῶν ἐπιορκιῶν καὶ ἁρπαγῶν καὶ πανουργιῶν συνειλεγμένα.

131. Here murder is charged upon the miser, as in Sat. II. I. 53, and in Pers. II. 14,—'Nerio jam tertia ducitur uxor;' and the argument proceeds to show that a man is not the less insane, because he is more criminal.

132. Incolumi capite=sanus. Cp. the varieties of phrase used: 'integer animi,' vv. 65, 220; 'rectum animi servas,' 201; 'stas animo,' 213.

132. Quid enim, etc. Cp. Juv. XIV. 284,—

'Non unus mentes agitat furor: ille, sororis
'In manibus, vultu Eumenidum terretur et igni:
'Hic, bove percusso, mugire Agamemnona credit
'Aut Ithacum.'

136. Tepefecit. As in Virg. Æn. IX. 419,—'Trajectoque hæsit tepefacta cerebro,' (sc hasta.) Cp. Ib. V. 701; Ov. Ep. I. 19.

140. Eurip. Orest. 264,—Μέθες μ' οὖσα τῶν ἐμῶν Ἐρινύων.

141. Splendida bilis. So Pers. III. 8,—'vitrea bilis.' It seems to be a medical term, expressing the bright colour of the bile when disordered.

143. Veientanum, a red wine, mentioned as a coarse drink for the mariner, Pers. V. 147,—

'Veientanumque rubellum
'Exhalet vapida læsum pice sessilis obba?'

144. Campana...trulla, "a Campanian (i. e a common earthenware) scoop." See art. 'Trua,' in the Dict. of Antiqq.

153. Deficient venæ....Bentl. compares Ov. ex. Pont. I. III. 10,— .....'Deficiens sic ad tua verba revixi
'Ut solet infuso vena redire mero.'

154. Fultura, "support to the failing stomach." Cp. Lucret. IV. 865,—'Capitur cibus ut suffulciat artus.'

155. Ptisanarium. Diminutive of ptisana, (barley crushed, or soaked for broth,) from Gr. πτίσσω, "a dish or decoction of rice."

161. Cardiacus. See above, v. 28. 'In cor trajecto...dolore.' Wine was prescribed for this complaint; hence the point of Juvenal's satire (v. 32),—'Cardiaco numquam cyathum missurus amico.'

ib. Craterum. Craterus was a fashionable physician,—a Greek.

166. Naviget Anticyram. Cp. Arist. Vesp. 1489,—(μανίας ἀρχή, 1486).....πῖθ' ἑλλέβορον.

168. S. Oppidius. Unknown.

169. Antiquo censu. Either, "rich in an ancient patrimony," or "according to the ancient standard;" as Carm. II. XV. 13.

171. Nuces. Cp. Persius' allusion to these, as used by children, S. I. 10,—'Nucibus facimus quæcumque relictis.'

172. Ludere. Bentley has perdere, a conjectural reading unauthorised by MSS. He brings forward, however, a remarkable array of passages, implying an almost proverbial use of dare or donare et perdere. So Martial, IV. XL,—'Jam donare potes, jam perdere.' Cp. VI. XXX. Senec. de Benef. VI. 4,—'Perdere se credit, non donare.' Tacit. H. I. 30,—'Luxuria specie liberalitatis 'imponit: perdere iste sciet, non donare.'

173. Tristem. This adj. seems to form a kind of antithesis with ludere, and so to confirm the common reading.

178. Et natura coercet, i. e. "and which naturally is enough." Cp. Livy's description of temperance (in Hannibal, XXI. 4),—'Desiderio naturali non voluptate 'modus finitus.'

179. Titillet. Cp. Cic. de Off. II. XVIII. 9,—'Multitudinis levitatem voluptate quasi titillantium.'

180. Uter. This word is not often found except in a dependent or interrogative construction. There are instances however: see Plaut. Stich. V. IV. 51,—'neuter utri invidet;' and Cic. de Off. III. 23,—'sibine uter rapiat?' and Verr. II. III. 14,—'si uter velit.'

181. Intestabilis. Cp. Sall. Jug. 67.—'Improbus intestabilisque.' It properly expresses a legal, civil, and penal disqualification for giving evidence and making wills (in both senses of testor.)

The harshness of the verse will be softened, if we suppose the in to have been read as separable in scansion from its compound. (See Munro on Lucr. II. 1059.)

182. In cicere atque faba. For the costliness of high office at Rome, see the art. 'Ædiles,' in Dict. Antiqq.; and cp. Cic. de Off. II. 16. The distribution of "vetches," etc. to the scrambling multitude (see Pers. V. 177,—Cicer ingere large Rixanti populo)' is sarcastically taken to represent the expenses generally.

183. Latus, "showily, proudly;" whether the reference be to the breadth and fulness of the dress, as in Ep. IV. 8; or as having the way cleared for him by his lictors; (so Lambinus.) Bentley compares 'subnixis alis me inforam, atque amicibor gloriose;' and 'ansatus ambulat' in Plaut. Pers. II. V. 6; but still better, Cicero's expression in Acad. II. 41,—'Erigimur, latiores fieri videmur;' (if the reading there was not doubtful. Baiter reads altiores.)

ib. In Circo. The games in the Circus (Circenses) commenced with a showy procession, in which persons of distinction took part.

ib. Stes. Cp. 'Levi de marmore tota...stabis,' Virg. Ecl. VII. 31.

185. Agrippa. He was ædile B. C. 33. See the art. referred to on v. 182, and his life in the Biogr. Dict.

187. What follows is founded upon the Ajax of Sophocles; in which (from v. 1047) the question of the hero's burial is contested.

188. Rex sum. 'Hoc volo, sic jubeo, sit pro ratione voluntas.' Juv. VI. 223.

188. Plebeius. Hom. Il. μ. 212,— ἐπεὶ οὐδὲ μὲν οὐδὲ ἔοικεν δῆμον ἐόντα παρὲξ ἀγορεύεμεν.

191. Hom. Il. α. 18,— ὑμῖν μὲν θεοὶ δοῖεν Ὀλύμπια δώματ' ἔχοντες ἐκπέρσαι Πριάμοιο πόλιν εὖ δ' οἴκαδ' ἱκέσθαι.

ib. Deducere is the better reading, and rightly explained by Orelli as 'domum ducere, ut decedere de provincia'='in urbem redire.' It is the regular word, (e. g. Liv. XXVI. 28) for "withdrawing troops homeward, or conducting them to their destination." Bentley understands it (not so well) in its common sense of "launching ships." Reducere has a majority of MSS. in its favour, and the first syllable is lengthened in Lucretius. But it may be safely conjectured to be the correction of a copyist, who did not recognise the proper and consistent use of deducere.

194. Putescit. Cp. 'putescat corpore posto,' Lucr. III. 871. Hom. Od. α. 161,—λεύκ' ὀστέα πύθεται ὄμβρῳ. Hom. Il. λ. 394,—ὃ δέ θ' αἵματι γαῖαν ἐρεύθων πύθεται.

195. Hom. Il. α. 255,—Ἦ κεν γηθήσαι Πρίαμος, Πριάμοιό τε παῖδες.

197. Mille ovium. Mille, in the plural, is always a substantive; in the singular, rarely.

199. See the description in Lucretius, I. 84,—'Aulide quo pacto,' etc. Cp. Eur. Iph. Aul. 883,—Ἀρτέμιδι θύσειν παῖδα σὴν μέλλει πάτηρ. And 893,—φρονῶν γὰρ ἔτυχε σὸς πόσις τότ' εὖ (i. e. "when he relented, and changed his purpose.")

205. Adverso, i. e. "the opposite shore." The scene of the dialogue must be supposed to be (cp. v. 191) at Troy.

206. Prudens, "knowingly, with design;" as in Epist. II. II. 18; Ars P. 462. Properly therefore, or in common language, the opposite of insanus. Cicero (de Off. III. 25) quotes Agamemnon's action as the wrong keeping of a rash promise.

208. Alias veris. Veri is the reading of many copies, which Gesner explains as 'Hellenismus pro alias vero.' Others take alias by itself, for diversas. The present reading seems preferable, and admits of being thus rendered,—"He "who adopts fancies other than the true (i. e. at variance with true principle), "and confounded by the force of evil passions, must be held to be disordered "in mind."

209. Commotus=insanus, or furiosus, as v. 278.

213. Cum tumidum est. Gr. οἴδανει, οἰδάνεται, Hom. Il. ι. 553, 646.

216. Forti. Homerice θαλερός, Il. ζ. 430. Engl. "gallant."

217. Interdicto. This part of the prætor's office is alluded to again, Epist. I. I. 103.

219. Muta=bruta, as in S. I. III. 100. And Juv. XV. 143,—'Soparat hoc nos a grege mutorum.'

223. Circumtonuit=attonuit.

ib. Bellona. Bellona was honoured with wild and bloody rites on the 24th of March (Cal. April 9.) Tibull. I. VI. 45—50. Cp. Juv. IV. 123,—

....'Fanaticus, œstro
'Percussus, Bellona, tuo.'

228. Tusci...vici. For an account of this street and the Velabrum, see Cookesley's Map of Rome, pp. 27, 28.

239. Metellæ. Wife of P. C. Lentulus Spinther, and divorced from him on account of Dolabella (Cic. Att. XI. 23; XII. 52.) [O.]

240. Solidum=integrum, ἄθροον. [G.] takes it as solidûm, for solidorum. Solidus was a gold coin, worth twenty-five denarii, but can have no place here. Decies signifies a sum, not a coin.

241. Diluit. Plin. N. H. IX. 35, (58, 59) relates this story, with a similar one of Cleopatra. So Suetonius, in reciting the nepotinis sumptibus of Caligula, ch. XXXVII.

246. Creta. Cp. Pers. V. 108,—

'Quæque sequenda forent, quæque evitanda vicissim,
'Illa prius creta, mox hæc carbone notasti?'

247. Casas, "baby-houses."

248. Ludere par impar, "to play at odd and even." Gr. ἀρτίαζειν, as in Aristoph. Plut. 816. Cp. Ov. Nux, 79,—

'Est etiam, par sit numerus qui dicat, an impar;
'Ut divinatas auferat augur opes.'

251. In pulvere. Cp. Hom. Il. o. 362,—

.....ὡς ὅτε τις ψάμαθον παῖς ἄγχι θαλάσσης ὅστ', ἐπεὶ οὖν ποιήσῃ ἀθύρματα νηπιέῃσιν, αὖψ αὖτις συνέχευε ποσὶν καὶ χερσὶν, ἀθύρων.

254. Polemo, pupil and successor of Xenocrates in the Academic school. 'Hic Speusippus, hic Xenocrates, hic ejus auditor Polemo, cujus ipsa illa sessio fuit 'quam videmus.' Cic. de Fin. V. 1.

255. Cubital. Many MSS. have cubitale. No doubt the word properly is an adjective; and so puteal, toral.

ib. Focalia (from fauces), "handkerchiefs for the neck"; like other fasciæ, signs of an effeminate habit, or of ill health.

259. Catelle. Dimin. of catulus; used as a pet name. A whole list of such names may be seen in Plaut. Asin. III. III. 76, 103.

262—271. This passage is taken nearly word for word from Terence, Eunuch. I. I. Cp. Persius' imitation, Sat. V. 161—173; and Epod. XI. 20.

262. Nec nunc. Orelli decides unhesitatingly for this reading, against ne nunc, referring to Madvig on Cic. Fin. pp. 82, sq. and 822, sq.

263. Dolores. 'Litore quot conchæ, tot sunt in amore dolores.' Ov. Art. Am. II. 519.

269. Mobilia. Cp. 'Tempestas et cæli mobilis humor,' Virg. Geor. I. 417.

270. Nihilo plus explicet, "he will make no more way." Cp. 'Per catervas explicare arma,' C. IV. IX. 41. Explico, with its various meanings, is nearly synonymous with expedio, and the two verbs are joined together in Cic. Fam. XIII. XXVI. 2,—'Ut ejus negotia explices et expedias.'

273. Si cameram percusti. This was a lover's mode of "trying his luck," to ascertain whether his love was returned. Cp. the τηλέφιλον, another equally ingenious test, in Theocr. Id. III. 29.

274. Balba feris...verba. Equivalent to 'blanditias tremula componere voce,' Tibull. I. II. 91. Cp. Pers. I. 33, 35,—

'Balba de nare locutus...
.....'tenero supplantat verba palato,'

(of the recitation, in character, of a love-tale.)

276. Ignem gladio. Apparently a proverbial expression for "going on to deeds of violence."

277. Marius slew Hellas, and then himself.

ib. Præcipitat. Historic present; as above, v. 61, edormit.

278. Cerritus (=Cereritus, from Ceres), "planet-struck;" like larvatus, with which it is joined by Plautus, Menæchm. V. IV. 9. Cp. Amphit. II. II. 113–4. Suetonius (Aug. 87), in his notice of Augustus' stylo in writing, remarks this word, 'ponit assiduo pro cerrito vacerrosum' (from vacerra, "a post.")

281. Circum compita, i. e. imploring the Lares Præstites or Compitales. See Ov. Fast. V. 129; and II. 618,—

'Compita servant
'Et vigilant nostra semper in urbe Lares.'

The Compitalia was a festival day in their honour.

ib. Siccus, "in his sober senses." Sat. II. II. 7; Carm. IV. V. 39; E. I. XIX. 9.

282. Lautis...manibus, i. e. as a worshipper.

283. Quid tam magnum? Al. quiddam. Bentley and Orelli support the text by comparison with Virg. Æn. XI. 705; Pers. V. 120. Cp. Theognis 14,—σοὶ μὲν τοῦτο, θεά, μικρὸν ἐμοὶ δὲ μέγα.

ib. Surpite. So acpite, for accipite, in Ennius, Cic. de Off. I. 12; poryite in Virg. Æn. VIII. 274.

285. Nisi litigiosus, i. e. if he warranted him sound in mind, he would be liable to an action. The seller 'qui scire debuit, præstat' (Cic. de Off. III. 17), was answerable for any defects, if cognisant of them. Cp. E. II. II. 17.

287. Gente Meneni, i. e. the family of fools.

291. Die quo...jejunia. Jovis dies (Thursday) was a weekly fast-day with the Jews, (and, it is said, with other Orientals.) That the superstitious Romans recognised, or even adopted, Jewish observances, is clear from Sat. I. IX. 69, and the passages there cited.

292. In Tiberi stabit. The same rite is mentioned in Juv. VI. 522; Pers. II. 15.

293. Necabit...reducet. ὕστερον πρότερον. [O.]

297. Compellare is nearly=ἀποκαλεῖν. Cp. S. I. VII. 31. For an instance of its usage in prose, cp. Liv. XXXIV. 2. Not that it may not have a good sense, as in Virg. Æn. III. 474,—'multo compellat honore.'

298. Plaut. Pseud. IV. VII. 77,—'Contumeliam si dices, audios.' Cp. Hesiod, ἔργα καὶ ἡμ. 721.

299. Every person is said in the fable to have a wallet at his back (Phædrus, IV. IX., speaks of two, one being worn in front,) filled with his own faults, which, therefore, he cannot see, though he sees those of others. So Pers. IV. 24,—

'Ut nemo in sese tentat descendere, nemo!
'Sed præcedenti spectatur mantica tergo.'

And so Catull. XXII. 21. Cp. Sat. I. III. 22.

303. Agave, the mother of Pentheus. See the Bacchæ of Euripides, and Ov. Met. III. ad fin.

308. "You are like a dwarf aping a tall man;" i. e. you vie with the rich.

310. Turbo was a little gladiator. Like Tydeus,—μικρὸς μὲν ἦν δέμας ἀλλὰ μαχήτης.

311. Spiritum. Cp. 'qui spiritus illi,' Virg. Æn. V. 648.

312. Te quoque, etc. sc. facere. "Is it right for you to do the same, when so little "on a level with him, and so far inferior in the contest?" Examples of the infinitive after a comparative [B.] finds in C. III. XXIV. 56; Pers. IV. 16; and especially Silius Ital. V. 77,—'Heu fatis superi cessasse minores!' Two variations of construing in this sentence are possible: 1. Tanto might stand for tanto viro, and would then be retained in both clauses. 2. Certare might be a substitution for facere (or=certatim facere) according to the principle pointed out on S. I. VI. 90.

313. Tantum. Al. tanto, which, however, cannot be used adverbially, except with a comparative, and, taken otherwise, is awkward. Tantum is used as in v. 317, and as multum (e. g. v. 147), for tam.

315. Denarrat. 'Ordine et plene narrat,' Orell. Cp. the explanation of defingo, Sat. I. x. 37. Cp. delitigo, "to rail without ceasing," A. P. 94.

ib. Ut, "how;" not "that."

326. Major...minori. There seems a double sense intended,—major, scil., victoria vel insania.

SATIRE IV.

This Satire may remind the readers of Smollett of the Feast in the Manner of the Ancients, in Peregrine Pickle.

It contains a string of precepts, burlesque often in meaning as well as manner, upon cookery. They are delivered as a lecture by Catius (perhaps an imaginary person, perhaps the "Soyer" of his day), in formal philosophic style, beginning ab ovo (v. 12), and running through cabbages and tough hens, mushrooms and mulberries, shell-fish, solids, wine, and sauces, whatever provokes appetite or promotes digestion. They conclude (v. 76) with reflections upon misplaced parsimony, and the neglect of (supposed) minor points, essential really to comfort and refinement.

Catius. Cicero mentions an Epicurean of this name; and it has been thought that Horace intended in his person to satirise that sect. But there is no real ground for identifying the two; and the drift of the satire evidently bears upon a prevailing folly, not any philosophic peculiarities.

Orelli has inferred, with much probability, from the Scholiast's expression—'irridet eum quod de opere pistorio in suo libro scribit de se ipso:—Hæc primus invenit et cognovit Catius Miltiades'—that this speaker was Catius' freedman, who had really written a cookery-book, and to whom therefore these maxims might be attributed, with some chance of taking in the gastronomical professors, who affected to know and retail the secrets of Mæcenas' kitchen. In reference to the style of the speaker, Orelli (on v. 3) aptly quotes Athenæus, VII. 36,—Ἀλαζονικόν ἐστι πᾶν τὸ τῶν μαγείρων φῦλον.

Ponere signa. Orelli understands the phrase of "assigning a character and place in the memory to," according to the Memoria Technica of Simonides; his Art of Memory is described at length by Cicero in two passages: Ad Herenn. III. 16 (28), sqq.; and de Orat. II. 86 (351), sqq. In his exposition of its method—a method traced out from a principle of luminous arrangement, viz. the perception (353) 'ordinem esse maxime qui memoriæ lumen afferret'—he lays down, that rooms or niches are to be marked out in the memory (354),—'locos esse capiendos, et ea, quæ memoria tenere vellent, effingenda animo atque in his locis collocanda;' in which are to be ranged the casts or shaped models of ideas and things. These niches he compares to writing tablets, the casts or shapes to letters,—'loci ceræ aut chartæ simillimi sunt, imagines litteris' (ad Her. 30); 'locis pro cera, simulacris pro litteris uteremur,' (de Or. 354, cp. 360). The subjects of knowledge, or conceptions of the mind, may be thus presented to the eye of the understanding in a substantial form, likeness, or shape,—'Res cæcas...conformatio quædam et imago et figura notaret' (357).

In accordance with this system, we find litteris consignare used side by side, and as if parallel, with in animo insculpere, in the account of Lucullus and his power of memory. Cic. Acad. II. 2,—'Ut litteris consignamus quæ monimentis mandare volumus, sic illo in animo res insculptas habebat.'

Ponere signa, if compared with and illustrated by these phrases, may be inferred to mean "shaping, casting, setting up models for" (as in statuary, see C. IV. VIII. 8, ponere is "to set up on the pedestal," and so, generally, "to execute a work.") Or ponere may be=disponere, as in de Or. 359,—'personis bene positis.' And where Cicero compares the imagines to letters, the dispositio imaginum is compared to writing,—scripturæ. Either way Horace's phrase may with some latitude be translated, "to find a place in the memory for," or "to give form and shape to."

3. Anyti reum. Socrates.

9. Tenues tenui, i. e. "matters requiring a nicety of perception to understand "them, of expression to convey them."

13. Magis alba. Bentley conjectured alma; but (as Dacier has remarked) the rule is really, like most of the subsequent rules, a jest.

16. Elutius, "more insipid." 17. Oppresserit, "has taken you by surprise."

18. Malum responset. Malum used adverbially, as turbidum, perfidum, Carm. II. XIX. 6; III. XXVII. 67. It is a pleonasm here, since responso involves the meaning "to repel, resist." Cp. Sat. II. VII. 85, 103.

21. Aliis male creditur. 'Ancipites fungi ponentur,' Juv. V. 146. The phrase male creditur is found in Ov. Fast. II. 225.

22. Prandia, "lunch." See Beck. Gallus, Exc. I. sc. IX. p. 358, sq.

24. Miscebat mella. This was for the gustus or promulsis, "a whet" to the appetite. Ibid. p. 361.

26. Leni...mulso. The emphasis is here placed on leni, as opposed to forti, v. 24. For mulsum, see Sat. II. II. 16. Cp. Virg. Geor. IV. 101,—

'Dulcia mella premes, nec tantum dulcia, quantum
'Et liquida et durum Bacchi domitura saporem.'

27. Francis translates thus:

'Sorrel and white wine, if you costive prove,
'And muscles, all obstructions shall remove;
'In the new moon all shell-fish fill with juice,
'But not all seas the richer sort produce.'

33. Ostrea Circeiis. Juv. IV. 140,—

'Circeiis nata forent an
'Lucrinum ad saxum, Rutupinove edita fundo
'Ostrea callebat primo deprendere morsu.'

34. Pectinibus, "scallops." Patulis,—Gr. ἀναπτύχοις,—"bivalves."

36. "Until he has mastered the art of flavouring," (sc. by using the proper sauces to each dish.)

37. Avertere. See the use of this verb in Cic. Verr. II. 1. 4. Al. averrere, a reading of equal authority. The first is perhaps more idiomatic: it is used of "seizing by fraud or violence," and here, accordingly, is interpreted, 'fraudare mensam alicujus delicati obsonio illo;' i. e. "to buy up before, or against, all competitors." Averrere="to sweep the board," has a more English sound.

38. Ignarum quibus est, i. e. without distinguishing the two kinds, viz. that which is to be dressed richly with sauces, and that which is to be plainly dressed. Quibus is not indefinite, therefore the indicative follows.

40—42. Umber. Fed in Umbria, and the woods of the Apennines. Laurens, "among the marshes of Laurentum."

'Actus aper, multos Vesulus quem pinifer annos
'Defendit, multosve palus Laurentia, silva
'Pastus arundinea'.....Virg. Æn. X. 708.

41. Cp. Juv. I. 141,—

'Totos
'Ponit apros, animal propter convivia natum.'

43. Capreas. Cp. Virg. Georg. II. 374.

58. Squillis. The squilla is taken for a kind of lobster, or shrimp; the other, or cognate, form scilla is the sea onion.

59. Lactuca. This rule is illustrated by Martial, XIII. XIV,— 'Claudere quæ cenas lactuca solebat avorum,
'Dic mihi cur nostras inchoat ille dapes?'
The lettuce was the close of the old and simpler meal, not of the modern, with which it would disagree (innatat,) and for which it served only as a whet.

61. Immorsus, "gnawed into;" metaph. "stimulated." Comp. Sat. II. VIII. 9,—'Lassum pervellunt stomachum.' The reading of a majority of MSS. is in morsus; but the context, which (vv. 51—62) treats solely of wines, and the taste for them, shows that the meaning is, "to be freshened for renewed drinking."

62. Mart. I. XLII. 9,—'Quod fumantia qui tomacla ranens
'Circumfert tepidis cocus popinis.'

63. Duplicis...juris, i. e. duorum jurium: "the two kinds of sauces;" (the simple, described in vv. 64, 65; and the compound, in which the ingredients of vv. 67—69 are added; viz. shredded herbs and saffron, subject to the process of fermenting and cooling down. Cp. the recipe in Sat. II. VIII. 45, 47.)

66. i. e. Byzantine pickles.

68. Corycio, i. e. "Cilician."

71. Venucula, a species of grape, called also sircula and stacula; 'ollis.....aptissima.' Plin. H. N. XIV. 2 (4.)

ib. Olla, "a jar." Cp. 'uvæ ollares,' Mart. VII. XX. 9.

73. Fœcem...allec, "wine lees and fish pickle;" mentioned together Sat. II. VIII. 9.

75. Incretum, "sifted, sprinkled over." 'Per incerniculum inspersum.'—Sch.

ib. Circumposuisse, i. e. plates were set round to (or between) the several guests.

81. Compare Sat. II. VIII. 10; also Epist. I. v. 22. For an account of these table-brushes, napkins, etc. see Becker, Gallus, Exc. III. sc. IX. p. 368.

83. Lapides varios, i. e. coloured marbles, a tesselated floor.

ib. Palma, sc. "a palm-broom." Mart. XIV. LXXXII. Cp. Juv. Sat. XIV. 59, sq.:
'Hospite venturo, cessabit nemo tuorum:
'Verre pavimentum.....
'Nec perfusa luto sit porticus, et tamen uno
'Semodio scobis hæc emendat servulus unus.'

84. i. e. "To hang soiled drapery round a purple couch." The torus, the soft stuffed couch, or cushioned part, upon the lectus, or sofa; the toralia, the "valance" or hangings falling round from it to the floor. Comp. Ov. Met. VIII. 655,— 'Torus est de mollibus ulvis
'Impositus lecto, sponda pedibusque salignis;
'Vestibus hunc velant.'
The toralia have been mistranslated, as "coverings for the couch." (The article 'torus' in Dict. of Antiqq. is misleading in this, as well as in its translation of ulvæ by "sea-weed," which could not make a comfortable mattress.) But Varro, L. L. v. 167, defines toralia, 'quod ante torum;' and Virgil's Æn. I. 700,—'Stratoque super discumbitur ostro;' and Lucretius, II. 35,—'Textilibus 'si in picturis ostroque rubenti Jacteris quam si in plebeia veste cubandum 'est;' lead naturally to the inference that the rich vestis was uppermost, and neither protected nor hidden by a wrapper. See Becker's Gallus, (p. 290.)

93. Quia contigit. 'What we have we prize not to the worth whiles we enjoy it.' Shaks. Much Ado, Act IV. Sc. I.

94. Cp. Lucret. I. 926, (quoted on Carm. I. XXVI. 6,) and Cic. Acad. Q. I. 8,—'Ad 'Græcos ire jubeo, ut ea a fontibus potius hauriant, quam rivulos consectentur.'

SATIRE V.

On fortune-hunting. An imaginary dialogue between Ulysses and Tiresias, whose advice, we must suppose, represents the actual trickeries resorted to by the dependents of rich men and needy expectants of a legacy. The methods exposed are presents (v. 11,) companionship (v. 17,) legal aid and advocacy (v. 27, sqq.) general suppleness and flattery.

Their usual success is described; their occasional detection and rebuff is illustrated in the story of Nasica and Coranus (vv. 56—69.)

A heading for this Satire may be taken from Cicero, Paradox v. (39): 'Hereditatis spes quid iniquitatis in serviendo non suscipit? quem nutum 'locupletis orbi senis non observat? loquitur ad voluntatem: quidquid de-'nunciatum sit, facit: assectatur, assidet, muneratur.'

---

1. Hoc quoque, Tiresia. The idea of this dialogue is taken from the Homeric scene in Hades, Odyss. λ. 90, sqq.

8. Vilior alga. Cp. Virg. Ecl. VII. 42.

9. Missis ambagibus. Nearly synonymous with sublatis dolis, Virg. Æn. XII. 26. Cp. ἁπλῷ λόγῳ, Æsch. P. V. 610.

10. Turdus. So in Ovid, A. Am. II. 269. And compare the mention of lovers' presents, Arist. Av. 707,—ὁ μὲν ὄρτυγα δοὺς, ὁ δὲ πορφυρίων', ὁ δὲ χῆν', ὁ δὲ Περσικὸν ὄρνιν.

15. "Wicked or worthless as he may be." Sine gente, "of no gens;" i. e. not a freeman.

16 Ne.....recuses. See note on Car. I. XXXIII. 1. Can this instance be classed under the exception as an hypothetical sentence?

18. Teyam...latus. Juv. III. 131,— 'Divitis hic servi claudit latus ingenuorum
'Filius.'
Cp. Ov. Fast. V. 68.

20. τλήσομαι ἐν στήθεσσιν ἔχων ταλαπενθέα θυμόν.
ἤδη γὰρ μάλα πόλλ' ἔπαθον, κ. τ. λ. Odyss. ε. 22. Cp. v. 18.
'Perfer et obdura; multo graviora tulisti.' Ov. Trist. V. XI. 7. (See Carm. I. VII. 30.)

22. Ruam. Used transitively. So Lucret. VI. 726,—'Ruit intus harenam.' So Virg. G. I. 105. Orelli quotes 'corruere divitias,' from Plaut. Rud. II. VI. 58.

25. Cp. Martial, VI. 63; and Lucian, in Timone, 21,—οἷος αὐτοὺς ὁ θύννος...διέφυγεν, οὐκ ὀλιγον τὸ δέλεαρ καταπιών. Cp. v. 44; and Juv. XII. 123,— 'Æger
'Delebit tabulas, inclusus carcere nassæ;'
(i. e. caught like a fish in the basket snare.)

32. Prænomine, i. e. they are proud of their prænomen, as the distinction of a free man. So the emancipated Dama, in Pers. v. 79,—
'Momento turbinis exit
'Marcus Dama.'

38. Pelliculam curare, i. q. "to make himself comfortable." Curare cutem expresses the idea of show, smartness, or comfort; curare membra (as Sat. II. II. 80) or corpus (as Virg. Æn. III. 511), of refreshment after fatigue.

39. Obdura. See note on v. 20.

39–41. Seu rubra.....conspuet Alpes. These lines, with their misapplied ingenuity of metaphor and epithet, are thought to be wholly parodied from Furius' poems. (See Sat. I. x. 36.) Rubra is perhaps a forced synonym for flagrans, or fervens. Infantes is strained from the prov. (Ep. II. II. 83) 'Statua taciturnius.' Conspuet Alpes is allowed to be the phrase on which the nickname Alpinus is founded. Pingui omaso is a coarse phrase, unfit for epic poetry, and either ridiculed on that ground, or else an actual description of the poet's figure and voracity.

44. Annabunt thunni. Cp. Aristoph. Eqq. 313,—τοὺς φόρους θυννοσκοπῶν, (said of Cleon, on the look-out for foreign tributes.)

45. Validus male, "an invalid."

46. Sublatus. Virg. Æn. IX. 203,—'Sublatum eruditi.' So susceptus, as in Cic. Tusc. III. 1.

49. Egerit Orco. Comp. Car. I. XXVIII. 10,—'Orco demissum.' So Virg. Æn. II. 398; IX. 527, 785. These constructions are clearly based on Homer, Il. a. 3, ψυχὰς Ἄϊδι προΐαψεν; it is not so clear whether they are poetical datives of place (signifying motion towards) or datives of object, which is a more usual syntax. In Homer, Ἄϊδι is probably a person, the King of Hades. Comp. Il. ε. 190, and see Heyne and Bothe's Annotations on Il. a. 3. In Æn. XI. 81, mitteret umbris is used of persons, sc. the Di Inferi.

53. Limis rapias, "learn by a rapid side-glance." Cp. Plaut. M. Glor. IV. VI. 2; Ter. Eun. III. V. 53.

ib. Prima...cera. Juv. IV. 19,—'Præcipuam in tabulis ceram.'

ib. Secundo.....versu. The second line would name the heir, as the first line the testator.

55. Recoctus scriba ex quinqueviro, i.e. a practised man of business, not easily imposed upon. Recoquere. 'Sæpius='in alios formare usus' (see on Carm. II. I. 38),—'Est igitur...mutata condicione factus quæsticuli causa scriba ex 'quinqueviro.'—Orelli.

The scribæ (see Dict. of Antiqq. art. 'Scriba') were notaries or secretaries, public servants, whose office was to register the public deeds of the senate, or the magistrates (e. g. prætors, ædiles,) to whom they were attached. Cicero, in Verr. III. 79, calls them 'ordo honestus.....quod eorum hominum fidei tabulæ publicæ periculaque magistratuum ("judicial records") committuntur.' Horace held for a time a scriptus quæstorius. Quinqueviri were commissioners of various kinds.

56. Hiantem. Cp. Lucian, Timon, 22,—τοὺς μάτην κεχηνότας.

58. Furis. Cp. the Gr. μάντις, from μαίνομαι.

59. This line makes good sense, though at first sight it seems a mere reductio ad absurdum. "What will happen, will happen, if I tell you it will," and vice versa. (Phil. Mus. p. 464.)

65. Soldum, i. e. solidum, "his debt;" lit. "his whole debt."

77. Perduci. Cp. perductores, Cic. Verr. II. I. 12.

83. χαλεπὸν χορίῳ κύνα γεῦσαι. Theocr. Id. X. 11. There is a kindred proverb in Theocr. XIV. 51,—ὡς μῦς, (φαντί) θυώνιχ', ἐγεύμεθα πίσσας.

84. Thebis. Tiresias speaks in character, as a Theban.

87. Elabi. Used here in its strict sense of "slipping off, or away;" but also in a general sense, as in Liv. XXXIX. 51,—'Ut nemo inde elabi posset.'

ib. Si posset, "to see if she could, so that she might if possible;" an idiom common in Greek: e. g. Thuc. I. 58; Hom. Il. β. 72; v. 464; and Odyss. I. 94,—ἤν που ἀκούσῃ, followed by the answering clause, ἠδ' ἵνα..... Comp. Virg. Æn. IV. 85, and VI. 78,—'Magnum si pectore possit Excussisse Deum,' (i. e. "in the endeavour to shake off," &c.)

92. So Persius, III. 80,—'Obstipo capite et figentes lumine terram.' With the sense, compare Lucian, Menipp. XII,—κάτω νενευκότες.

93. Increbuit, "has freshened." 'Crebrescunt optatæ aurœ,' Virg. Æn. III. 530. Compare Georg. I. 359.

97. The MSS. omit the final et, which the Editors mostly favour. So in Car. IV. IX. 42, 43. It doubtless is more likely to have been added as a correction or explanation, than dropped, if originally in the text. 'Conjunctiones de-'tractæ afferunt aliquid obscuritatis, etsi gratiam augent.' So thought Augustus: see Life by Sueton. 86.

99. Servitio. Cic. Parad. 5,—'An eorum servitus dubia est qui cupiditate peculii 'nullam condicionem recusant durissimæ servitutis?'

100. Certum vigilans, "wide awake." Ovid has incertum vigilans ("between sleeping and waking,") Epist. X. 9.

ib. Quartæ...partis...heres. The more technical phrase was heres ex quadrante, or heres ex teruncio.

102. Unde, with acc. So in Sat. VII. 116.

103. Sparge, "let fall" expressions of this kind. Compare—

'Spargere voces
'In volgum ambiguas.' Virg. Æn. II. 98.

105. See Pers. VI. 33,—'Sed cenam funeris heres negliget.....urnæ Ossa inodora 'dabit,' etc.

109. Nummo, i. e. at a nominal price.

ib. Addicere. Used nearly in a future sense,—"that you are willing to make it over."

On this subject of inheritances, we may compare the satirical ignotus heres of Carm. II. XVIII. 6, and the marked mention by Suetonius (c. 66) of Augustus' liberal resolution,—'qui numquam ex ignoti testamento capere quicquam 'sustinuerit,' and 'legata.....relicta sibi aut statim liberis eorum concedere, 'aut, si pupillari statu essent, die virilis togæ vel nuptiarum cum incremento 'restituere consueverat.'

(All the best Emperors followed the same rule. Caligula, on the contrary, c. 38, even extorted property by forced wills.)

110. Vive. Comp. 'vivite silvæ,' Virg. Ecl. VIII. 58. Martial (VI. LXX. 15) plays on the double term,—'Non est vivere, sed valere vita.'

SATIRE VI.

This Satire contains a graceful acknowledgment of patronage received, and a cheerful and contented description of the enjoyment of it. Incidentally, we are introduced to the round of employments which occupied the day at Rome; and, after a passing sketch of the poet's rise into public notice, the freedom and ease of retirement to the country seat is contrasted with them; and the moral is supplied by the epilogue of the town and country mouse.

This Satire is imitated by Swift (vol. XII. of the 8vo. edition.)

---

5. Maia nate. Mercury was κερδῷος, ἐριούνιος θεός (Compare Sat. II. III. 68,) and especially a protector of Horace. Carm. II. VII. 13; II. XVII. 29.

9. Denormat, "makes irregular; takes off from the line or square of....."

10—13. Urnam argenti...Hercule. Copied by Pers. Sat. II. 11. Mercury 'præerat apertis lucris, Hercules opertis.' Orelli. Hercule. There was an old Italian divinity, Herculus="God of the Farmyard or Fold," from hercere, "to fence off," whose attributes and name the Romans confused with those of the Greek Hercules. (See Mr. Marriott's Adelphi, 699; and his reference to Mommsen, R. Hist. p. 174.) The wealthy Romans offered tithes to him. Torrentius cites Macrob. III. 12,—'Testatur etiam Varro majores solitos 'decimam Herculi vovere, nec decem dies intermittere quin pollucerent, 'populumque asymbolum cum corona laurea dimitterent cubitum.' Cp. Plaut. Stich. I. III. 80,—'Uti decumam partem Herculi polluceam.'

13. Gratum. Is this nominative or accusative? neuter or masculine? The best critics decide for the first. 'Ita juvat ut gratum sit animo meo,' Orelli. So Lambinus. 'Grate acceptum,' Baxter, Bothe, Gronovius. But Doering interprets 'grati animi hominem;' i. e. "if I can enjoy and be thankful for what I have." This would accord with E. I. XI. 23.

16. Montes et arcem. Hendiadys, "my mountain home."

19. Autumnus, the unhealthy season. Juv. X. 221,—'Quot Themison ægros autumno occiderit uno.'

20. Jane. For a like use of the vocative, cp. Tibull. I. VII. 53,—'Sic venias hodierne.' Theocr. XVII. 66,—ὄλβιε κῶρε γένοιο.

ib. Audis. As Gr. ἀκούεις=appellaris. So Milton, P. L. III. 7,—'Or hearest thou rather pure ethereal stream?'

23. Romæ, "when at Rome."

25. Bruma, from brevissima (sc. dies.)

26. Interiore...gyro, "an inner or contracted circle."

ib. Trahit, "draws on slowly," expresses the gradual as well as the late dawning of winter days. Others take it as contrahit, Engl. "draws in;" 'minus accurate,' Orelli.

27. Quod mi obsit..., "stipulations which may bring me into trouble." Cic. de Off. I. 14,—'Qui gratificantur cuipiam, quod obsit illi, cui prodesse velle videantur.' There is perhaps an allusion here to the apophthegm of one of the Seven Sages, ἐγγὺς πάρα δ' ἄτη, quoted among others in Plato, Charm. p. 165, s. 27. (We may compare also S. S. Prov. VI. 1.)

29. Improbus urget, i. e. "he abuses me without measure." If this is the right punctuation, cp. E. I. VII. 63,—'negat improbus;' E. I. X. 40; and S. I. IX. 73. Compare the adverbial use, as it may be called, of plurimus, in Virg. Geor. I. 187; Æn. I. 419. (See further in the note on E. I. X. 40.)

30. Tu pulses. 'Comice de se loquitur 2da persona,' Gesner. Orelli assigns the sentence to the improbus.

32. Hoc, "this," i. e. the sense of my intimacy with Mæcenas.

ib. Melli (dat. of mel), "is delicious to me."

ib. Atras...Esquilias, "the gloomy Esquiline." See the description of it as a common burial-ground, in Sat. I. VIII. 10—16.

35. Sibi adesses, i. e. as a witness. Cic. pro Quint. 6,—'Ad tabulam Sestiam sibi adsint.'

38. Signa. The signet of Augustus, and the right of using it in his name, was entrusted to Mæcenas, with the prefecture of Italy, in B. C. 31.

40. Septimus octavo. These markings of time seem inconsistent with the dates proposed by Bentley. The mention of the signet (v. 38) and the Dacian war, or the rumours of it, (v. 53; cp. Carm. III. VI. 14) appear to determine the composition of this Satire to the year 30 B. C., or the close of 31 B. C. If so, the first introduction of the poet to his patron (see Sat. I. VI. 61) was in 39, or the beginning of 38 B. C. This will agree with the date 37 B. C. for the journey to Brundisium. There is a marking of time in Sat. II. III. 185, where reference is made to Agrippa's ædileship in 33 B. C.

44. Thrax...Syro par. 'Gladiatorum compositiones,' Cic. ad Fam. II. VIII.

46. Rimosa. 'Patulæ aures,' Epist. I. XVIII. 70. Contr. 'tutis auribus,' Carm. I. XXVII. 18. Terent. Eun. I. II. 23, sq.,— 'Quæ vera audivi, taceo, et contineo optime:

'Sin falsum ...
'Plenus rimarum sum, hac atque illac perfluo.'

48. Noster, "our friend." Horace adopts the familiar, half-sarcastic term used of him by his acquaintance.

I have followed Orelli's punctuation: it makes the construction of subjectior less irregular; but the meaning of noster need not be affected by it.

50. Frigidus...rumor, i. e. "an evil or ill-boding rumour." 'Colder news,' as Shakespeare has it, Rich. III. Act. IV. Sc. IV. ad fin.

55. Triquetra...tellure, "Sicily." Cp. Lucret. I. 718,— 'Insula quem (sc. Empedoclem) Triquetris terrarum gessit in oris.'

Cp. Ov. Fast. IV. 420,—'Trinacris.' A division of lands was made for the veterans in the winter of 30 B. C. There had been one after the Sicilian war, which some (e. g. Clinton, F. H. in 36 B. C.) suppose to be intended in this passage. But see the note on v. 40, sup.

59. Perditur. 'Hoc nunc quidem unicum exemplum est præsentis passivi in verbo perdere.' [O.] Lachmann (on Lucr. II. 829) condemns it, and corrects porgitur; which however does not suit the context equally well. Porrigis horas is used in Ov. Met. IV. 199, but in a different sense="you lengthen out the short hours." The sense required here is not of lengthening or spinning out the day, but of wasting, losing it; which is just expressed by the common reading.

62. Cp. 'Securos latices et longa oblivia potant,' Virg. Æn. VI. 714.

63. Faba Pythagoræ. See Callim. Fr. 128, and Blomfield's note. See Lucian, Βίων πράσις, c. 6; and Ὄνειρος, c. 4,—μήτε κυάμους ἐσθίειν, ἥδιστον ἐμοὶ γοῦν ὄψον ἐκτράπεζον ἀποφαίνων...κυάμους φαγόντα, ὡς ἂν εἰ τὴν κεφαλὴν τοῦ πατρὸς ἐδηδόκεις.

64. Cp. Juven. XI. 78,—

'Curius parvo quæ legerat horto
'Ipse focis brevibus ponebat oluscula...
. . . . . .
'Et natalitium cognatis ponere lardum.'

(Bentley conjectures focis for satis in this passage.) The aspirated form holuscula is in Hl. B. Cp. Juv. XI. 79, ed. Jahn. In accordance with it, I note the var. read. holus, E. I. V. 2; XVII. 13. So, Forum Holitorium ("the green market") is the reading in Tac. Ann. II. 49. No one, however, has aspirated olitoris in E. I. XVIII. 36.

71. Cp. Cowper's Task:

'The customary rites
'Of the last meal commence; a Roman meal.
. . . . . .
'Discourse ensues, not trivial, yet not dull,
'Nor such as with a frown forbids the play
'Of fancy, or proscribes the sound of mirth.
. . . . . .
. . 'Themes of a graver tone,
'Exciting oft our gratitude and love.
'While we retrace, with memory's pointing wand,
'That calls the past to our exact review,
'The dangers we have 'scaped.....
'O evenings worthy of the gods! exclaimed
'The Sabine bard.'

75. Ov. ex Pont. II. III. 8,—'Vulgus amicitias utilitate probat.'

77. Aniles...fabellas. Cp. Plato, Theæt. 85, p. 176,—ὁ λεγόμενος γραῶν ὕθλος.

91. Nemoris...dorso. The same expression is in Virg. Geor. III. 436.

95. This is commonly compared with Eurip. Alc. 782, sqq.

103. Canderet, "glowed, shone brilliantly;" a rare usage: the word is mostly restricted to the idea of "whiteness," or "heat."

107. Succinctus. So Eumæus entertaining Ulysses, Hom. Od. XIV. 72,—ζωστῆρι θοῶς συνέεργε χιτῶνα. Cp. also Hesiod, Sc. Herc. 287,—ἐπιστολάδην δὲ χιτῶνας ἐστάλατο.

109. Prælambens, var. lect. prælibans, an elegant and probable reading, if it had more MS. authority; and it is a more natural word to express the taster's office. Yet, as [O.] remarks, considering that the verna here is a mouse, prælambo is appropriate.

111. Agit lætum convivam, "enjoys himself;" literally, "plays the guest:" a form of expression analogous to ducem profitetur, "shows the (skill and character of a) general," Ov. Art. Am. I. 181. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 591,—'confossa Deam.' So in Moschus, Europa, 77,—κρύψε θεόν, "he hid the god," (i. e. his true character as one.)

SATIRE VII.

Davus, a slave, is here the speaker. He asks and obtains leave to retort upon his master his own doctrines.

He begins by arguing that the fickle inconstant character is as worthless as the wholly unscrupulous. Horace himself is then lectured, as one who praises the "good old times," yet loves the luxury of the modern (v. 23); who loves the country when in town; who hates parties when not invited out; but who, if invited, is off at a moment's notice (vv. 30—35.) He is then compared with his own dependents, whom he leaves in the lurch, and has abused for being discontented (v. 40.) But he is open to a worse contrast; he is not merely on a level with Mulvius the parasite, but with Davus the bought slave (v. 43.)

The contrast in this part is too coarse to be dwelt on, but concludes (v. 68, sqq.) that he who, after warning or escape, hankers for vice, or is restrained only by circumstances, is as little upright as the thief, who is kept from filching by publicity, is honest. He is "passion's slave," incapable of emancipation by any outward relief or change. "Who then is free?" The question is finely answered (vv. 83—88); and the sense may be expressed nearly in Hamlet's words,—

'One in suffering all that suffers nothing;
'A man that fortune's buffets and rewards
'Has ta'en with equal thanks.'

The subject passes on presently to picture-fancying (v. 95), to the luxuries of the table (v. 102), to their costliness (v. 110), to the miseries of restlessness (v. 112), indolence, and ennui. Here the lecture (as if it touched on a sore point) is abruptly closed by the wrath of the listener.

---

4. Ut vitale putes, i. e. not too good to live. Cp. Ov. Am. II. VI. 39,— 'Optima prima fere manibus rapiuntur avaris;
'Implentur numeris deteriora suis.'

10. Clavum mutaret. See Dict. of Antiqq. art. 'Clavus' with the quotation from Ovid, Trist. IV. X. 35,—'Clavi mensura coacta est.'

12. Cp. Isocr. Or. XV,—περὶ Ἀντιδ. 305,—ἐν τ. ἀκολασίαις ἡμερεύειν ἐν αἷς πρότερον οὐδ' ἂν οἰκέτης ἐπιεικὴς οὐδεὶς ἐτόλμησεν.—Mundior, i. e. "the better class of freedmen."

13. Doctus, i. e. "a student." The reading doctor="a professor" (the Schol. says "of oratory") has about equal authority of MSS.

14. Vertumnis...natus iniquis. Cp. Sat. II. III. 8,—'Iratis natus dis;' Epist. II. I. 68,—'Jove æquo.' "Born under the evil star of all the Vertumni." Vertumnus (from verto), "the god of change." 'Mille habet ornatus, mille decenter habet.' Tibull. IV. II. 14. See Propert. IV. 2.

15. Scurra, 'urbanus,' Schol. The two terms are joined in E. I. XV. 27–8: so they are in Plaut. Trin. I. II. 165. Scurra is used of various classes in Horace; of the lowest rank of "jesters" in S. I. V. 52; of "a diner-out" in E. I. XV. 28; of the poet's own dependents or hangers-on in this Satire, v. 36. Scurror is simply "I play a part, or flatter," in E. I. XVII. 19; and XVIII. 2. The word is not used, but the character is described in S. I. IV. 87. Probably, as it included the idea of "a wit," so it passed into the sense it bears here, of "a gay man, a man of pleasure, a gamester."

16. Qui pro se, etc. Cp. Cowper (Task, The Sofa),—
'The paralytic, who can hold her cards,
'But cannot play them,' etc.

17. Phimum, "a dice-box." Gr. φιμός, Æschin. p. 9, 59. Generally synonymous with fritillus, Juv. XIV. 5; turricula, Mart. XIV. XVI.

19. Levius miser, "less wretched," or, "with less sense of being so."

20. A proverb evidently for an inconstant character,—"now strict, now slack;" but it is a question whether it is derived primarily from the working of sail-ropes, or pulleys of any kind; or from coupling or leading animals in a string. I conclude it is from the last; comparing Pers. V. 118,—'Quæ dederam supra relego, funemque reduco;" and 158–60.

21. Putida, "rotten," (see Sat. II. III. 75); here="not worth attention, tiresome, tedious:" as putidiusculi, Cic. ad Fam. VII. 5. Cp. the αἴνιγμα σημαίνεις σαθρόν of Eur. Suppl. 1064.

22. Furcifer="rascal." The furca was a sort of portable pillory: ire sub furcam expresses abject slavery, v. 66.

26. Cp. Cic. Ep. II. 7,—'Si ea defendes quæ recta esse senties.'

27. Cæno. This is thought to be taken from a Greek proverb, ἐκτὸς πηλοῦ πόδας ἔχειν.

31. Amasque, "you congratulate and hug yourself on not having to go out."

33. Serum. Cp. vespertinus, Sat. II. IV. 17. Epist. I. V. 3,—'Supremo sole'.....

ib. Lumina prima. Epist. II. II. 98. περὶ λύχνων ἀφάς, Herod. VII. 215. So Juven. X. 339,—'ante lucernas.' Cp. ad lumina ("by candle-light,") Virg. Æn. VIII. 411, 34. Nemon, etc.

'Verumne? itane? ocius adsit
'Huc aliquis! Nemon? Turgescit vitrea bilis.' Pers. III. 7.

ib. Oleum, i. e. "oil" for lights to light you on your way.

35. Fugisque, "you hurry off." So in Lucian, Gallus, 9,—κἀπειδή ποτε ὁ καιρὸς ἀφίκετο πρὸς τάχος ἐμαυτὸν ἀποῤῥίψας ἀπέρχομαι.

37. Dixerit ille, sc. Mulvius. "He will say, perhaps, in justification, I am a mere "diner-out, an idler, a tavern-haunter; but so are you, though you dress up "your tastes in a specious garb, and pretend to be a friend, not a parasite."

39. Si quid vis, adde. A Ciceronian phrase: see Ep. ad Att. VII. II. 3.

42. Quid si. Davus here resumes his own part.

43. Quingentis.....drachmis, about £20, reckoning the drachma at 9¾d. The price of a page (puer,) in Epist. II. II. 5, is three times the sum.

45. Crispini.....janitor. As Horace is supposed (in Sat. I. i. 120) to draw his philosophy from Crispinus, so his slave from the janitor. Something like this is in Aristoph. Acharn. 402,— > ὦ τρισμακάρι' Εὐριπίδη

> δθ' ὁ δοῦλος οὑτωσὶ σοφῶς ὑποκρίνεται

59. There is a reference here to the contract ('turpissimi auctoramenti,' Sen. Ep. XXXVII.) by which freemen, on taking service as gladiators, bound themselves 'uri, vinciri, verberari, ferroque necari.'

76. Pers. v. 124, (add v. 175),—

> 'Liber ego. Unde datum hoc sumis, tot subdite rebus?
> 'An dominum ignoras, nisi quem vindicta relaxat?'

Vindicta (properly res vindicata, then used, as here, for the old word festuca=), "the rod of the prætor," which he laid on the slave's head in the ceremony of manumission.

78. Super dictis, πρὸς τοῖς εἰρημένοις. Cp. 'super hoc,' Epist. II. ii. 24.

79. Mos vester, "the maxim of you masters."

81. Alii. Compare Carm. III. XXIX. 52; Sat. II. ii. 135,—'Nunc mihi, nunc alii.' See Lachmann on Lucr. IV. 637.

82. Nervis alienis mobile, "a puppet;" νευρόσπαστον. Comp. Lucian, Menipp. 4,—ἀτεχνῶς οὖν ἔπασχον τοῖς νυστάζουσι τούτοις ὅμοιον ἄρτι μὲν ἐπινεύων, ἄρτι δὲ ἀνανεύων ἐμπαλιν. He uses the simile however for the distractions, not of passion, as here, but of false and incongruous philosophies. [O.] quotes Plato, Legg. I. 644, L.

83. Cp. Eur. Frag. Inc. 170,— > μηδ' ἄν τι συμβῇ δυσχερὲς δουλοῦ πάλιν

> ἀλλ' αὐτὸς ἀεὶ μίμνε τὴν σαυτοῦ φύσιν
> σώζων βεβαίως.

86. Compare Cic. Paradox. II,—'Qui est totus aptus ex sese, quique in se uno sua 'ponit omnia.' Plato, Menex. 20,—εἰς ἑαυτὸν ἀνήρτηται πάντα. (So Lucian, in Timone, 32 and 35.)

ib. Teres atque rotundus, "regular and round." A perfect character is here (by implication) compared to a sphere, faultless in form, and from which all attacks glance off powerless.

For an accurate account of the proper and applied meanings of teres ("cylindrical") and rotundus ("circular"), see Donaldson, Lat. Gram. App. IV. 91; and Munro on Lucr. I. 36.

90. Comp. Cic. Paradox. V. 2; and so for v. 95.

91. Gelida, sc. aqua, as in Juv. V. 63. In Sat. I. i. 54, liquidi is used substantively.

94. Negantem, i. e. "in spite of yourself." Comp. Eur. Hippol. 237,—ὅστις σε θεῶν ἀνασειράζει.

95. Pausias, of Sicyon, fl. 350 B. C.; famous for encaustic painting.

97. Contento poplite. Compare Virg. Æn. X. 587,—

> 'Projecto dum pede lævo
> 'Aptat se pugnæ.'

(Some interpret of the spectators, not the combatants, "in the attitude of admiration.")

99. Re vera. ὡμίλευν ὥστε ζωοὶ βροτοὶ ἠδὲ μάχοντο. Hom. Il. σ. 539.

102. ἤλεγχον, οὕτω γὰρ κακὸν δοῦλον γένος·
γαστὴρ ἅπαντα, τοὐπίσω δ' οὐδὲν σκοπεῖ. Eurip. Alex. Fr. 10.

105. Qui tu, etc. A phrase borrowed by Persius, V. 130.

107. Nempe="the fact is, you are not impunitior, for," &c. With the sentiment, compare Juv. I. 142,—

'Pœna tamen præsens, cum tu deponis amictus
'Turgidus et crudum pavonem in balnea portas.
'Hinc subitæ mortes,' etc.

And so Athenæus, p. 429, quoting Alexis (Φρύξ 1, Meineke),— εἰ τοῦ μεθύσκεσθαι πρότερον τὸ κραιπαλᾶν παρεγίγνεθ' ἡμῖν, οὐδ' ἂν εἷς οἰνόν ποτε προσίετο πλεῖον τοῦ μετρίου.

110. Prædia vendit. Compare 'comedunt patrimonia,' Juv. I. 138.

111. Servilo gulæ parens. γνάθου τε δοῦλος νηδύος θ' ἡσσημένος, Eurip. Autol. Fr. I. 5. Comp. ἀνδραποδώδεις, Xen. Mem. I. 1. 16.

113. Ponere. Used here of time, as elsewhere of money, "to lay out; to turn to good account." So in Pliny, Ep. IV. 23,—'Disponere otium.'

117. Versus facit. Satirically made a synonym for insanit. Comp. Ars Poet. 296. Dryden's lines are famous,— 'Great wits are sure to madness near allied,

'And thin partitions do their bounds divide.'

Absalom and Ahithophel.

118. Opera=operarius. Compare the threat, εἰς μυλῶνα, Eur. Cycl. 240.

SATIRE VIII.

This is the account of a supper given by Nasidienus Rufus, a vain, rich gourmand. The narration is in the mouth of the comic poet Fundanius, who was among the guests. The entertainment appears to have been conspicuous for vulgar display; and the host's affected, and perhaps blundering, gastronomy is ridiculed throughout. Much of the description may be compared with the rules of the Fourth Satire.

---

2. Here. Quintilian attests this form, as having supplanted the older heri; which however was the form retained 'in epistolis Augusti, quas sua manu scripsit?' I. VII. 22.

3. De medio...die. Cp. Epist. I. XIV. 34: i. e. 'solito maturius,' as in Juv. XI. 88. The usual hour of the cena was three. So Ep. I. VII. 71. So, 'ab octava bibit,' Juv. I. 49, is an instance of excess. See also Carm. I. I. 20.

4. Fuerit melius. Sat. II. II. 120,—'bene erat,' "I never enjoyed myself more." So below, v. 19.

5. Compare the expression of "extreme hunger" in Virg. Æn. II. 356,—'Improba 'ventris Exegit cæcos rabies.'

7. Cenæ pater. See Merivale's History of Rome, vol. IV. ch. XLI. p. 554: he remarks on this as the Roman term, in contrast to the Greek one of Symposiarch, or (as Carm. I. IX.) Thaliarchus.

11. Alter sublegit. The slave, whose office this was, is called analecta by Martial, VII. XX. 17.

14. Hydaspes, i. e. an Indian page. Comp. Carm. I. XXIX. 7.

15. Maris expers. This is explained to mean either "a home-made wine," to imitate the Chian; or "without sea-water," an ingredient of frequent use in flavouring wines. But neither of these meanings gives, as the general context requires, an idea of wealth or vulgar display. The first explanation also seems overthrown by v. 48, where "Chian" is directly opposed to "home-made wine." Persius, uses the phrase (Sat. VI. 39), and indicates the meaning.

He uses maris expers as ="wanting in vigour, unmanly, weak." He is speaking of newly adopted notions imported by 'Doctores Graios...Sapere... nostrum hoc maris expers.' "This new and emasculate philosophy of ours." Maris with him is clearly the genitive of mas, not mare. And so, in Horace, the Chian wine is "wanting in body," having lost all strength and flavour by age,—costly, but worthless.

20. Summus ego, etc. The account of this arrangement is fully given in the Dict. of Antiqq. art. 'Triclinium.'

ib. Viscus Thurinus, i. e. "of Thurii." This epithet distinguishes him from the two brothers, Horace's friends, mentioned Sat. I. x. 83. [O.]

21. Servilio. This must be scanned as a trisyllable; as Alfēnius, Sat. I. III. 130.

ib. Balatrone. This may have been a nick-name. Cp. balatrones, in Sat. I. II. 2.

22. Umbras, "uninvited guests." 23. Ipsum, i. e. "the host."

24. Obsorbere. This is a stronger compound than absorbere or exsorbere (which here, and in S. II. III. 240, are various readings for it,) and signifies "eagerly "swallowing, gulping down." Cp. obduco, as in Cic. Tusc. Qu. I. XL. 96,—'Cum 'venenum ut sitiens obduxisset.'

ib. Read semel=uno haustu. See Bentley's note.

25. Ad hoc qui=propter hoc ut.

26. Nam cetera, "for we all, excepting him, found the dishes, various as they "were, disguised completely by their flavouring." (Compare Peveril of the Peak, ch. XXVII,—'Never saw so unnurtured a cub; knew no more what he 'eat than an infidel!') The principal word is not cenamus, but celantia, as in Sat. I. IV. 79; and so v. 19.

29. Passeris, "flounder." Bentley reads passeris assi et. [O.] calls the reading 'petulans nesciocujus interpolatio ducta ex Sat. II. IV. 38.'

30. Ingustata mihi, "which I never tasted before."

31. Melimela, "honey apples." 'Dicuntur a sapore melleo,' Plin. XV. 14.

34. Moriemur inulti. Compare Virg. Æn. II. 670.

35. Calices...majores. Was Vibidius privileged, by the invitation of Mæcenas, to do this in despite of the master of the house? or was it to make fun of him? Comp. Sat. I. IV. 87. It was the custom after the cena (properly so called) to call for majora pocula (comp. Cic. Verr. II. I. 26.) So Virg. Æn. I. 723,—

'Postquam prima quies epulis mensæque remotæ
'Crateras magnos statuunt.'

Comp. Eur. Ion, 1178,—ἀφαρπάζειν χρεὼν οἰνηρὰ τεύχη σμικρὰ μέγαλα δ' εἰσφέρειν.

39. Allifanis, from Allifæ in Samnium, 'ubi fictiles et latiores calices fiebant.' Schol.

46. Garum, a pickle made from the fish garus originally, also from the scomber (or mackerel.) The scombri were caught in greatest abundance off the shore of Carthago Nova, or Spartaria, and the island opposite; hence called Scombraria. See Pliny, N. H. XXXI. 43. And compare Martial, XIII. CII:

Garum sociorum.

'Exspirantis adhuc scombri de sanguine primo
'Accipe fastosum, munera cara, garum.'

The Greek is γάρος,—καὶ τὸν ἰχθύων γάρον. Æsch. Fr. 195.

50. Quod Methymnæam... i. e. Lesbian vinegar.

52. Incoquere, "to dress in (or, with) this sauce." Cp. Virg. Geo. IV. 279; and Pers. II. 74, for a metaphorical application,—'Incoctum generoso pectus 'honesto.'

53. Melius muria quod, i. e. "as the taste which the shell-fish naturally gives out is better than prepared pickle." (Quam is the reading of some MSS. and is interpreted "as better than the pickle prepared from shell-fish.")

54. Ruinas...fecere. A phrase from Lucretius, I. 740.

65. Hæc est condicio=τὰ θνητὰ τοιαῦτ, οὐδὲν ἐν ταὐτῷ μένει, Eur. Ion, 969.

66. Comp. Ov. Fast. IV. 641,—'Fructu non respondente labori.'

67. Tene, etc. Comp. Ter. Phorm. II. II. 25,—

'Ten asymbolum venire, unctum atque lautum e balneis,
'Otiosum ab animo; cum ille et cura et sumptu absumitur,
'Dum tibi sit quod placeat; ille ringitur, tu rideas.

75. Tibi Di, etc. Compare in Greek,—σοὶ δὲ θεοὶ τόσα δοῖεν ὅσα φρεσὶ σῇσι μενοινᾷς. Hom. Odyss. ζ. 180; and Eurip. Med. 688.

77. Soleas poscit. While reclining on the triclinium, the slippers were put off; to call for them, therefore, was preparatory to rising and leaving the table. [Θ.] cites Plaut. Trucul. II. IV. 12–16. Compare also Aristoph. Vesp. 103,—κέκραγεν ἐμβάδας.

78. Stridere. This form is in frequent use, as well as stridēre, e. g. Virg. Geo. IV. 556.

83. Secundo, "keeping up the joke; seconding him."

84. Arte.....fortunam. 'Quod cecidit forte id arte ut corrigas.' Terent. Ad. IV. VII. 23.

86. Mazonomo, a large dish, from which properly (μᾶζα νέμεται) bread or cake was handed round.

88. Ficis pastum, "the liver of a goose fatted up on figs." Gr. συκωτός, ficatus. 'Anseris ante ipsum (sc. dominum) magni jecur.' Juv. V. 114. Compare Martial, XIII. LVIII,—'Magno jecur ansere majus.'

Q. HORATI FLACCI EPISTOLARUM.

LIBER PRIMUS.

EPISTLE I.—AD MÆCENATEM.

The first Epistle is addressed to Mæcenas, in excuse of the writer's abandonment of poetry for philosophy. In justification of this bias, practical reflections are subjoined, and an exhibition of the follies and the inconsistencies of men (as in the first and third Satires of the First Book.)

1. Prima dicte...summa dicende Camena. This has been understood as referring to the opening Odes and Satires, but is merely a complimentary form of address. Comp. Hom. Il. ι. 96 (and the passages quoted there by commentators),—ἐν σοὶ μὲν λήξω σέο δ' ἄρξομαι. Virg. Ecl. VIII. 11,—'A to principium tibi desinet.' It is adopted with a more serious meaning by Milton, P. L. v. 165,—'Him first, Him last, Him midst, and without end.'

2. Spectatum. 'Verbum proprium de gladiatoribus, sæpe victoribus.....nota 'SP' 'expressum in tesseris (i. e. "prize-medals") 'quæ talibus honoris causa 'dabantur.' Orelli.

ib. Rude. Rudis was the foil or wooden sword of the gladiator, with which, on dismissal from service, he was presented. (Hence, in Sueton. Tib. 7, the word rudiarii=emeriti.) Cp. Cic. Phil. II. XXIX. 74,—'Tam bonus gladiator rudem tam cito accepisti?' And Ov. Am. II. IX. 22,—'Deposito poscitur ense rudis.' On the figurative meaning of rudimentum, properly "foil practice," and elementum, "training and food," terms derived into common language from the usage of the ludus, see Donaldson, in Varronianus, p. 169.

2—8. Rude...armis...equum. These metaphors are similarly combined in Ov. Trist. IV. VIII. 19—24:

'Ne cadat et multas palmas inhonestet adeptas
'Languidus in pratis gramina carpit equus.
'Miles, ut emeritis non est satis utilis annis,
'Ponit ad antiquos, quæ tulit arma, Lares.
'Sic igitur tarda vires minuente senecta
'Me quoque donari jam rude tempus erat.'

5. Herculis, etc. Cp. the Gr. Epigr. (cited by Obbar),— δέξαι μ', Ἡράκλεις, Ἀρχέστρατου ἱερὸν ὅπλον ὄφρα ποτὶ στεπτὰν παστάδα κεκλιμένα γηραλέα τελέθοιμι.

ib. Abditus agro. So Tibull. II. III. 39,—'Tristibus agris abdere.' Cp. Virg. Geor. III. 96,—'abde domo,' (apparently for domi, or domum, with a curious nicety of distinction)

7. Purgatam. Pers. V. 63, 86, and 96,—

'Purgatas inseris aures
'Fruge Cleanthea?'... And,
'Stoicus hic aurem mordaci lotus aceto.'

(The first instance signifies "a listening, attentive ear;" the second, "a discriminating, critical one.")

8. Cp. Ennius, as quoted Cic. de Senect. 5,—

'Sicut fortis equus spatio qui sæpe supremo
'Vicit Olympia, nunc senio confectu' quiescit.'

10. Nunc itaque. So Cicero, speaking of philosophy,—'Huic ætati hoc maxime aptum est.' Ac. Q. I. II.

12. Condo et.....i. e. "I am collecting and storing principles for eventual use."

13. Quo lare tuter, "under what roof I shelter myself;" i. e. to what sect of philosophy I belong. Orelli compares Carm. I. XXIX. 14,—'Socraticam domum;' and Cic. Divin. II. I. 3,—'Peripateticorum familia.'

14. Addictus. See the Dict. of Antiqq. art. 'Nexum:' Liv. III. 56,—'In servitutem addixisset.' Compare Cic. Tusc. Q. II. II. 5,—'Certis quibusdam destinatisque 'sententiis quasi addicti...ut etiam quæ non probare soleant, ea cogantur con-'stantiæ causa defendere.' And so Quintil. Inst. III. I. 22,—'Neque enim me 'cujusquam sectæ velut quadam superstitione imbutus addixi.' The general sentiment and the simile in the next line (v. 16) may be taken from Cicero, Acad. II. III. 8. See Walck. vol. II. p. 306.

16—19. The sense is, "Now, as a Stoic, I plunge into the turmoil of public life. "Now, as an Epicurean, I glide back into indifference, and make myself inde-"pendent of the world without." Cp. Carm. I. XXXIV. 1—5.

Λάθε βιώσας was the maxim of Epicurus. Cp. Eurip. Antiopa, Fr. 35,— ὅστις δὲ πράσσει πολλὰ μὴ πράσσειν παρόν, μῶρος παρὼν ζῆν ἡδέως ἀπράγμονα.

18. Aristippi...præcepta. With regard to the aversion to political exertion, cp. Xen. Mem. II. I. 8, 9; and Cicero's jests upon Trebatius, as a reported Epicurean, ad Fam. VII. 12; and comp. Acad. Qu. II. 42 (131), and 45 (139),—'Labor (as here relabor) eo ut assentiar Epicuro aut Aristippo; revocat virtus.'

19. Mihi res. Cp. (for a verbal resemblance) Herod. VII. 49,—αἱ συμφοραὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων ἔρχουσι, καὶ οὐκὶ ἄνθρωποι τῶν συμφορέων.

23. Ingrata, "irksome." Cicero complains (ad Fam. IV. 13),—'Mihi ipse displiceo. 'Natus enim ad agendum semper aliquid dignum viro, nunc non modo agendi 'rationem nullam habeo, sed ne cogitandi quidem.'

28. Lynceus. Βλέπειν ὀξύτερον τοῦ Λυγκέως (Arist. Plut. 210) was a proverb.

30. Glyconis, an athlete of the day.

34. Eur. Hippol. 478,— εἰσὶν δ' ἐπῳδαὶ καὶ λόγοι θελκτήριοι, φανήσεταί τι τῆσδε φάρμακον νόσου.

These prescriptions are couched in metaphors drawn from medicine, and magical or religious means of cure. The supposed efficacy of charms (ἐπαοιδαί, cantus) is related in Hom. Od. τ. 456; Virg. Æn. VII. 757. So in Pind. Pyth. III. 51, (where see Cookesley's note.) [O.] quotes from Seneca de Ira, III. 9,—'Pythagoras perturbationes animi lyra componebat.' So Lucian (Charon, V. 7), παρ' Ὁμήρου...ἐπῳδήν.

35. Morbi. Cp. Cic. Tusc. III. IV. 7.

37. Ter, a sacred number in religious rites. Cp. Sat. II. I. 7; C. III. XXII. 3.

ib. Pure. Cp. Tibull. II. I, 13,—'Pura cum veste venite...'

39. Ferus...mitescere...culturæ. These words all correspond to one metaphor, as Virg. Geor. II. 36,—'Fructusque feros mollite colendo.' Cp. 'mitiget agrum,' Epist. II. II. 186.

40. Culturæ. Cic. Tusc. II. v. 13,—'Cultura animi philosophia est.'

ib. Commodet aurem, "Lend me your ears." Shakes. J. Cæs. Act III. Sc. II.

46. Per mare. Cp. Juv. XIV. 275,—

'Aspice portus
'Et plenum magnis trabibus mare; plus hominum est jam
'In pelago, veniet classis quocumque vocarit
'Spes lucri.'

49. The sense is, "What village boxer would not wish to gain the Olympic crown, "if he could, moreover, gain it without hardship?" i. e. Why do not men seek the prize of virtue, and relieve themselves from this ceaseless and ignoble strife?

51. Sine pulvere. Cp. Plin. N. H. XXXV. XI. 139,—'Dexippum qui pancratio Olympia citra pulveris tactum (al. jactum), quod vocant ἀκονιτί, vicit.' And Xen. Ages. VI. 3,—ἐν τοῖς ἀγῶσι δὲ οὐδὲν ἧττον τοὺς ἀκονιτί, ἢ τοὺς διὰ μάχης νικῶντας στεφανοῦσι.

55. Prodocet. 'Nunc est ἅπαξ λεγόμενον=alta voce et palam docet. Græce, προδιδάσκειν.' [O.]

56. i. e. Like school-children. See margin. Comp. Juv. XIV. 207–9.

57. Lingua, "readiness of language, a good address." Compare Epist. I. IV. 9,—'Sapere et fari quæ sentiat.'

58. Juv. III. 154—9: 'Exeat, inquit,
'Si pudor est et de pulvino surgat equestri
'Cujus res legi non sufficit.....
'Sic libitum vano, qui nos distinxit, Othoni.'

59. Ludentes, Rex eris. Plato, Theæt. p. 146, A.—ὥσπερ φασὶ οἱ παῖδες οἱ σφαιρίζοντες ...ὃς ἂν περιγένηται ἀναμάρτητος βασιλεύσει ἡμῶν. Compare the story of Cyrus in Hdt. I. CXIV.

60. Murus aëneus. Cp. Pind. Frag. 153; Æschines in Ctesiph. 84.

62. Sodes=si audes; (so stated by Cicero, Orat. XLV. 154.) See the meanings of audeo illustrated and traced in Wagner's note on the Aulularia, 46.

63. Nenia, i. e. the old song or saying. So cantilena, as in Ter. Phorm. Act III. Sc. II. 10. (The phrase answers perhaps, though not strictly, to παίδων κληδόνι, in Callim. Epigr. I. 14.)

64. Curiis. Comp. the story of Curius in Cic. de Sen. 16.

ib. Decantata. Cic. de Fin. IV. 4,—'Quasi dictata decantare.'

67. The Scholiast quotes the following distich, as composed by Pupius,— 'Flebunt amici et bene noti mortem meam,
'Nam populus in me vivo lacrimatust satis.'

73. Taken from Lucilius,—
'Quid sibi volt! quare fit ut introversus et ad te
'Spectent atque ferant vestigia se omnia prorsus?'
Cp. Plato, Alcib. Prim. XXXIX. p. 123,—κατὰ τὸν Αἰσώπου μῦθον, κ. τ. λ.

76. Multorum...capitum. Cp. Plato, Rep. IX. p. 588,—θηρίου ποικίλου καὶ πολυκεφάλου. So Shakespeare, Introd. to King Henry IV. Part II,—'The blunt monster with 'uncounted heads.' And Sir W. Scott, Lady of the Lake, canto V. 30,— 'Thou many-headed monster-thing,
'O who would wish to be thy king?'

77. Conducere publica, "to contract for and undertake public offices; to farm the "public revenues." In the same sense Cicero (Paradox. 6) uses 'publicis 'sumendis.' Cp. Juven. III. 31, (speaking of private and public contracts),—

'Quis facile est ædem conducere, flumina, portus,
'Siccandam eluviem, portandum ad busta cadaver.'

78. Crustis et pomis. Theocr. XI. 10,—ἤρατο δ' οὔτι ῥόδοις, οὐ μάλοις, οὐδὲ κικίννοις.

79. Vivaria. Cp. the parallel metaphor cetaria, in Sat. II. v. 44.

84. Lacus, i. e. the Lucrine lake, close to Baiæ. Compare Val. Max. I. I,—'C. 'Sergius Orata, ne gulam Neptuni arbitrio subjectam haberet, peculiaria sibi 'maria excogitavit, æstuariis intercipiendo fluctus.... Ædificiis etiam spatiosis 'et excelsis deserta ad id tempus ora Lucrini lacus pressit.'

86. Fecerit auspicium, i. e. "if his idle fancy prompts." Cp. Virg. Æn. IV. 341,—'Meis auspiciis,' where Wünderlich observes on the rarity of the phrase, 'ubi 'de rebus privatis agitur.' Gesner and Orelli here comp. Æn. IX. 185,—'An 'sua cuique deus fit dira cupido?' Yet see Car. II. XV. 12.

ib. Teanum. A town of the Sidicini in Campania. The sense is,—"You will have "to go and build inland for him to-morrow, instead of a marine villa." Acron understands this as if the workmen were simply to go home,—'Teanum, 'abundans optimis fabris.'

91. Cenacula, "his garrets."

'...Quem tegula sola tuetur
'A pluvia, molles ubi reddunt ova columbæ.' Juv. III. 201.

97. Pugnat sententia. So Ov. Met. XV. 27,—'Pugnatque diu sententia secum.'

102. So Juv. XIV. 288,—

'Curatoris eget qui navem mercibus implet
'Ad summum latus.'

104. i. e. "Though you watch me so narrowly, and show so much concern for me."

EPISTLE II.—AD LOLLIUM.

In this Epistle an allegorical explanation of the Homeric poems is given, followed (at v. 32) by a series of moral principles, clearly and keenly laid down for the due regulation of life.

---

1. Maxime, i. e. maxime natu. The eldest son of the M. Lollius of Carm. IV. IX.

4. Chrysippo et Crantore, i. e. "than any philosopher, whether Stoic or Academic."

9. Hom. Il. η. 347.

10. Ut salvus, etc. i. e. "Paris defies any one to compel him to choose power "and safety." Others take it thus,—"Even though he should gain power "and safety by it, he denies that he can be forced to this alternative." [B.] reads quod, as the accusative after cogi.

14. Cp. Hesiod, ἔργ. καὶ ἡμ. 260,—ὄφρ' ἀποτίσῃ δῆμος ἀτασθαλίας βασιλέων...

ib. Delirant. From the old word lira, "a furrow;" an agricultural metaphor properly. Varronianus compares Hesiod, ἔργ. καὶ ἡμ. 443,— ὅς κ' ἔργου μελετῶν ἰθεῖαν αὔλακ' ἐλαύνοι μήκετι παπταίνων μεθ' ὁμήλικας ἀλλ' ἐπὶ ἔργῳ θυμὸν ἔχων.

19. Hom. Odyss. α. 1,—ἄνδρα μοι ἔννεπε, Μοῦσα, πολύτροπον, sqq.

70. Quod si, etc. It is altogether in the style of Horace, to soften the didactic character wherever he assumes it, to preclude giving offence in giving advice; and this seems the key to the sense here,—"I keep my own course; you can "hold back from it, or push on more keenly; I do not pretend to rule or race "with you." Commentators cite Soph. Aj. 1038.

EPISTLE III.—AD JULIUM FLORUM.

A letter to Julius Florus, to inquire after old friends associated with him in attendance upon Tiberius, who then had a command in the East; written also to encourage him in literary and intellectual studies; but mainly, perhaps, to draw him to a complete reconciliation with a common friend, Munatius.

---

1. Of Julius Florus nothing is certainly known. Walckenaer conjectures that he may have been a younger son of Aquilius Florus, slain with his eldest son in the proscription. Torrentius infers from the prænomen that he was a provincial, enfranchised, and adopted into the Julia gens. A Julius Florus is mentioned by Quintilian, as distinguished for his eloquence; and by Tacitus, as fomenting a rebellion among the Treviri, A. D. 21: Tac. Ann. III. XL.

2. Claudius, Tiberius Claudius Nero, afterwards the Emperor Tiberius. He was sent, B. C. 20, to the East, to place Tigranes on the throne of Armenia.

3. Thraca, a form used also by Virg. Æn. XII. 335.

4. Turres, 'Soston et Abydon,' Schol. The mention of these countries is adapted in its order to the route of Tiberius.

9. In ora. As Virg. G. III. 9,—'per ora;' and Theognis, 240,—πολλῶν κείμενος ἐν στόμασι.

10. Pindarici, etc. i. e. an imitator of Pindar. Comp. Carm. IV. II.

11. This is perhaps an imitation of Callimachus, Epigr. XXIX. 4.

14. Ampullatur. Cp. ampullas, Ars P. 97; and see note. This term is also said to be borrowed from Callimachus, Fragm. 319,—ληκύθειος Μοῦσα.

15. Quid mihi Celsus agit? "How is my friend Celsus?" The Eighth Epistle is addressed to him.

ib. Monitus. Orelli argues that this advice is given, not against plagiarism, but imitation and translations from Greek poets.

17. Palatinus...Apollo. The temple on the Palatine, with its public library. Its dedication is the occasion of Carm I. XXXI. Cp. Ov. Trist. III. I. 60-64 (The first library of the kind had been founded by As. Pollio, in the Atrium Libertatis, on Mount Aventine. See Ovid, l. c. 71.)

24. Respondere, with jura as a cognate accusative,—"to decide law-points," as chamber-counsel.

ib. Amabile carmen. Theocr. I. 61,—ἐφίμερον ὕμνον.

26. Frigida curarum fomenta, i. e. "anxieties which, like cold applications, numb "the energies."

32. Coit. Used properly of a wound closing up and healing.

34. Feros, "restive," as in Ep. XIII. 8. Gr. ζυγομαχοῦντας.

EPISTLE IV.—AD ALBIUM TIBULLUM.

To the poet Tibullus,—a pleasant recital of the comforts and means of happiness at his command, with a hint as to their right use. The terms and tone of the letter, and its closing profession, are Epicurean; perhaps affectedly so; 'Ridentem dicere verum quid vetat?' to prevent the hint being taken as a reproof, or the reproof felt as a personality; or possibly because the moralist shrank from full avowal of truths but dimly seen, and the real meaning of his own words.

---

1. Candide. So Ov. Trist. IV. X. 132,—'Candide lector.'

2. Pedana. At Pedum, between Tibur and Præneste, was the home of Tibullus.

3. Cassi. Not the Cassius of Sat. I. X. 62; nor, though one of the conspirators against J. Cæsar, the Cassius, their leader.

After Brutus' death, he followed Sextus Pompeius, and was at the sea-fight off Mylæ in 36 B. C. Then he surrendered to and followed Antony. Eventually he was put to death by Octavian. Vell. Paterculus says he was the last, as Trebonius was the first, of the conspirators who met a violent death.

4. Reptare. The same word is used to describe a student's walk, in Plin. Ep. I. XXIV.

6. Eras, "you used not to be." But is it not rather an instance of the imperfect as used (refinedly) for the present tense?—"You certainly are not; I cannot think you are."

9. Sapere et fari. Epist. I. I. 57. Cp. Xen. Mem. I. II. 52,—ἀξίους εἶναι τιμῆς τοὺς εἰδότας τὰ δέοντα καὶ ἑρμηνεῦσαι δυναμένους.

10. Compare the description of Thorius Balbus, Cic. de Fin. II. 20,—'Color 'egregius (cp. v. 6, formam), integra valetudo, summa gratia,' etc.

11. Mundus victus, nearly our "comfort."

ib. Deficiente crumena. So Juv. XI. 38.

13. Cp. Eur. Alcest. 783. But also compare our Morning Hymn by Bp. Ken,—'Live this day as if the last.'

ib. Dilunisse. Mostly used as an impersonal; e. g. 'jam dilucescebat, Liv. XXXVI. 24. Cp. the subst. diluculum.

16. Comp. Cic. ad Fam. IX. 20.

EPISTLE V.—AD TORQUATUM.

This is an invitation to a holiday entertainment on the eve of Cæsar's birthday (v. 9), in which are mingled praises of conviviality, and a refined regard also to niceties of taste, comfort, and security.

---

1. Archiacis, made by Archias, some workman of the day. 'Archias breves lectos fecit.' Schol.

2. Olus omne, i. e. a frugal meal. "A mere salad, nothing but salad."

3. Torquate. See Carm. IV. VII. He seems (see vv. 10, and 31) to have been a lawyer. Compare the mention of facundia in the Ode, v. 23, and the figurative arbitria, as an image of death.

4. Iterum Tauro, sc. iterum consule; B. C. 26.

ib. Diffusa, sc. 'ex doliis in cados'.....'Contra defunditur, Sat. II. II. 58, ex cratere in pocula.'—Orelli. Anglice, "bottled."

5. Petrinus, 'ager Sinuessæ vicinus,' Schol. Now the 'petit village de Piedimonte.' Cicero had a villa there, ad Fam. VI. 19. [W.]

6. Arcesse, "send it me." 'Recte dici arcessere rem patet ex Cic. Att. XVI. XI. 4.' [O.]

7. Splendet. The brightness of the hearth, not of a fire, is intended.

9. Moschi causam. This was a well-known rhetor of Pergamus. Walckn. suggests that he had, perhaps, given lessons to Torquatus. He was tried on a charge of poisoning, and was defended by Torquatus and Asinius Pollio.

ib. Nato Cæsare. Augustus' birthday fell on Sept. 23; and [O.] understands this of that day: 'Sic nude dictum vix aliter intelligi potest,' and 'sub cælo 'Italico illa quoque nox quæ proprie erat autumnalis, dici poterat æstiva.' The difficulty regards rather the time of year, than the term adopted: æstas and æstivus might very well be extended to September, one would suppose: but such passages as E. I. VII. 5, and XVI. 16; and Juv. VI. 517,—'Metuique jubet Septembris et Austri adventum,' imply that the fear of malaria would have driven all the fashionable world away, and left very little society in Rome. Therefore others interpret Cæsare of the Dictator, whose birthday, the 12th of July, was registered as a public holiday.

16. Designat, i. e: 'plan, sketch out.' So 'quæ designata sint et facta,' Plaut. Most. II. I. 66. And in another sense, 'modo quid designavit?' (i. e. "what new prank has he played?") Ter. Ad. I. II. 7.

18. Sollicitis. Cp. Eur. Frag. Inc. 47,— οὐκ ἔστι λύπης ἄλλο φάρμακον βροτοῖς ὡς ἀνδρὸς ἐσθλοῦ καὶ φίλου παραίνεσις· ὅστις δὲ ταύτῃ τῇ νόσῳ ξυνὼν ἀνὴρ μέθῃ ταράσσει καὶ γαληνίζει φρένα, πάραντα δ' ἡσθεὶς ὕστερον στένει διπλᾶ.

19. Cp. Hom. Od. ξ. 463,— οἶνος ἀνώγει

ἠλεὸς ὅς τ' ἐφέηκε πολύφρονά περ μάλ' ἀείσαι καί θ' ἁπαλὸν γελάσαι καί τ' ὀρχήσασθαι ἀνῆκεν, καί τι ἔπος προέηκεν ὅπερ τ' ἄρρητον ἄμεινον.

21. Imperor. See the note on A. P. 56; and Munro's on Lucr. II. 156.

23. Cantharus. Juv. III. 205, (where see Mayor's note.)

24. Ne fidos, etc. Μισέω μνάμονα συμπόταν. Mart. I. XXVIII. (See Becker, Gallus, sc. I. p. 6, and note 8.)

30. Quotus, "of what number?"—i. e. "with how many others?" Cp. Mart. XIV. CCXVII,—'Dic quotus et quanti cupias cenare.' Gr. ποστός, as ποστὸν ἔτος, quotus annus? Hom. Od. ω. 258. Cp. E. II. I. 35; Ov. A. A. II. 663. Its correlative pronoun tŏtus is of rare occurrence, but is in Lucret. VI. 652,—'Nec tota pars, homo terrai quota totius unus' (i. e. "not so large a part as one man is of all the earth.") When compounded with quisque, it forms an idiomatic phrase for "how few;" e. g. 'forma quota quæque superbit?' Ov. A. A. III. 103. So, indeed, quotus by itself, as 'quota pars hæc sunt?' Ov. Her. XII. 89.

EPISTLE VI.—AD NUMICIUM.

The moral of this epistle may be in part represented by Milton's line (Comus, 210),—

'These thoughts may startle well, but not astound
'The virtuous mind.'

It opens with a proverb from the Greek, which in its original meaning denoted the characteristic fearlessness of the well-balanced mind, free from amazement or superstitious alarm at natural phenomena; but which might be, and here is, brought to bear upon moral causes of disquietude as well. These are the admiration and desire of wealth and power, of popular distinctions (vv. 5—14; 17—23), the real value of which is tested by Time and Death (vv. 24—27.) True wisdom is never in excess (v. 16); the real excellence of life is found in virtue (v. 30); if not, let a man indulge his bent without respect to virtue; enrich himself without scruple as to means (v. 32, sqq.); gratify his ambition as he will (v. 49, sqq.), or his luxury (v. 56, sqq.)

The subject seems at first sight unfinished; we should have expected the counter-principle of v. 30 to be advocated in its turn; but it is left for inference, and loses nothing perhaps of its force, if fairly studied; helped out as it is by the evident irony of such lines as 36—38; 45—47; 62—64.

---

1. Nil admirari, from the Greek, μηδὲν θαυμάζειν, which the Schol. quotes as a saying of Pythagoras (it is given in Plutarch, de Audiendo, 13.) Orelli compares, amongst other passages, Archilochus, Frag. XXI. 2,—οὐδ' ἀγαλομαι θεῶν ἔργα; and Lucian, Timon, 27, (describing a wealthy man) θαυμάζει τε τὰ οὐ θαυμαστὰ, καὶ ὀρέγεται τῶν φευκτῶν. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Qu. V. 28; and De Fin. V. 29—'Ex illa investigatione naturæ consequi volebat ut esset bono animo: 'id enim ille summum bonum εὐθυμίαν et sæpe ἀθαμβίαν appellat.'

1. Compare Plutarch, Life of Pericles,—'From him (sc. Anaxagoras) he learned 'to overcome those terrors which the various phenomena of the heavens raise,' &c.—Langhorne's Translu.

On this subject we may perhaps refer to the prophecy of Jeremiah, X. 2.—'Learn not the way of the heathen, and be not dismayed at the signs of hea-'ven; for the heathen are dismayed at them.'

2. Facere...beatum. On this term and these ethics consider St. Augustine's word's (Serm. 150, quoted in Wordsworth's N. T., on Acts XVII. 18),—'Dic, Epicuree, 'Quæ res faciat beatum? Responde: Voluptas corporis. Dic, Stoice: Virtus 'animi. Dic, Christiane: Donum Dei.'

10. Favor is used of hope in Virg. G. III. 106,—

'Exultantiaque haurit
'Corda favor pulsans;'

and Ov. Fast. III. 362; and similarly too, exterreo, as in Virg. Æn. XI. 806.

11. Externat is a conjectural reading, approved by Lachmann, Lucr. IV. 1022. [O.] in answer refers to Lucr. II. 1040,—'novitate exterritus.' See the whole passage, vv. 1028—47.

12. Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 733,—'Hinc metuunt cupiuntque, dolent gaudentque.' 'Nec cupias nec metuas' is the motto of Lord Hardwicke's family.

22. Cp. Pers. VI. 15,—

'Etsi adeo omnes
'Ditescant orti pejoribus.'

24. Cp. Soph. Ajax, 647,— ἅπανθ' ὁ μακρὸς κἀναρίθμητος χρόνος φύει τ' ἄδηλα καὶ φανέντα κρύπτεται.

31. Virtutem verba. This seems to be an allusion to Brutus' dying words (given in Dion. XLVII. ad fin.);—ὦ τλῆμον ἀρετή, λόγος ἄρ' ἦσθ'· ἐγὼ δέ σε ὡς ἔργον ἤσκουν, σὺ δ' ἄρ' ἐδούλευες τύχῃ. Compare Shakespeare's (Hamlet, Act III. Sc. IV.),—'Such a deed.....sweet religion makes a rhapsody of words.'

32. Lucum ligna. Observe the alliteration, as in virtutem verba. The general sense is,—"Do you think there is no reality in virtue; that it is a matter of "mere words? If so, then be not controlled by it, but follow your own desires "unscrupulously."

ib. Ne portus occupet. Cp. Cic. de Off. III. XII. 3.

33. Cibyratica, from Cibyra, on the borders of Caria and Lycia, with a water passage down to the bay, facing Rhodes.

37. Cp. Soph. Fragm. Aloa. 109,— καὶ γὰρ (sc. τὰ χρήματα) δυσειδὲς σῶμα καὶ δυσώννυμον, γλώσσῃ σοφὸν τίθησιν εὔμορφόν τ' ἰδεῖν.

39. Cappadocum rex. Slaves from Cappadocia were numerous at Rome. Cp. Cic. post Red. VI. The king of Cappadocia at this time was Archelaus; he reigned from B. C. 36 until A. D. 17, and the kingdom was then reduced to a Roman province. (Tac. Ann. II. XLII.) Some have thought that Ariobarzanes, whom Cicero calls perpauper, (ad Att. VI. III.) is alluded to here. He had been put to death by Cassius B. C. 42.

40. Lucullus: This passage is quoted, and the story told, in Plutarch's Life of Lucullus.

46. Furibus. 'Imprimis servis.' [O.] There is apparently the same meaning in Virgil's antithesis, Ecl. III. 16,—'Quid domini faciant, audent cum talia fures?'

48. Primus...postremus. Used as in Virg. Geor. II. 410.

49. Species. Cp. Cic. in Pisonem, 11, (24),—'Magna species, magna dignitas..... consulis.'

50. Qui dictet, i. e. "a nomenclator."

51. Trans pondera. Engl. "across the counter." Compare the use of ponderibus, Sat. I. III. 78. This interpretation has been illustrated and confirmed from a fresco at Pompeii. Gesner interprets "beyond his balance;" and so Lachmann on Lucret. VI. 574.

53. Cuilibet. If this is not a compound word, libet should be libeat, or libebit, as in the next v. 'cui volet.' Orelli (after Bentley) objects that cuilibet is=primo cuique, and extravagant in meaning. Even so it has a parallel with us; it is no more than was said by the owners of boroughs. But words are not to be pressed always to an extreme: they are to be taken with natural limitations. The simple sense here is,—"He can turn the scale in anybody's favour;" i. e. any candidate's.

54. Importunus, i. e. "a restless, busy agent."

55. Facetus, i. e. "with ready courtesy."

56. Compare Juv. XI. 11,—

'Multos porro vides quos sæpe clusus ad ipsum
'Creditor introitum solet expectare macelli,
'Et quibus in solo vivendi causa palato.'

57. Quo ducit gula. This may be=ad ipsum introitum macelli, (as in the above quotation.)

ib. Piscemur, venemur, may be "let us set out to procure our fish and venison:" and, if so, was this a jesting phrase used by Gargilius? and was his show of sporting a pretence to excuse, or a bravado to display, his luxury?

61. Crudi tumidique. Juv. I. 142,—

'Pœna tamen præsens cum tu deponis amictus
'Turgidus, et crudum pavonem in balnea portas.'

Compare Pers. III. 98.

62. Cœrite. See 'Cœritum Tabulæ' in Dict. of Antiqq.

ib. C. cera digni, i. e. "disfranchising ourselves, surrendering our rank and rights "as citizens," or (in the moralist's view here) "as men."

ἡ φύσις γὰρ οἴχεται ὅταν γλυκείας ἡδονῆς ἥσσων τις ᾖ. Eur. Fr. Antiop. 23.

Compare Cic. de Fin. II. 114,—'Quis est autem dignus nomine hominis qui 'unum diem totum velit esse in isto genere voluptatis?'

63. Remigium. Like Ulysses' crew. The cause of their ruin is specified Odyss. α. 8,— αὐτοὶ γὰρ σφετέρῃσιν ἀτασθαλίῃσιν ὄλοντο νήπιοι οἳ κατὰ βοῦς ὑπερίονος Ἠελίοιο ἤσθιον, αὐτὰρ ὁ τοῖσιν ἀφείλετο νόστιμον ἦμαρ.

The story is given Odyss. μ. 270, sqq.

EPISTLE VII.—AD MÆCENATEM.

A letter of apology to his patron for his lengthened absence in the country; the terms are even affectionate (vv. 11, 12.) His sense of the discriminating kindness he had received is illustrated by his description (in contrast) of vulgar profusion (v. 14, sqq.); and his own spirit of independence by the fable of the little fox (vv. 29—34); he will prefer leanness with liberty, to wealth without it; or like Telemachus (v. 40,) he will not be tempted by vain show to desire what is useless or unfitting for him. He closes with the anecdote of the rich orator Philippus (vv. 46—95,) to exemplify the folly, the awkwardness, and the discomfort, not to say ruin, consequent on a man's quitting his own natural sphere of life. (Swift has an imitation, one of his wittiest, of this Epistle.)

1. Quinque dies, i. e. "only a few days." Rure, poetic for rure.

8. Officiosa sedulitas, i. e. ceremonious attendance on the great. These officia salutandi were very laborious. Comp. Martial, VII. XXXIX; Juv. v. 77.

12. Contractus, i. e. "curled up in a snug and warm posture;" as e contr. fusus is ="lying at full length." 'Sic Lucian, Saturn, IX. 9,—ἐπικεκυφότες...ἀμφὶ 'τὴν κάμινον. Ipsum frigus contractum vocatur, Virg. Geor. IV. 259,—Apes 'contracto frigore pigræ.' [O.]

13. Compare Cic. ad Att. x. 2,—'χαλαγεῦσα jam adest.' Hesiod, ἐργ. καὶ ἡμ. 566. So Ov. Fast. II. 853.

22. Dignis.....paratus, "ready for worthy persons" (sc. as the objects of his encouragement or patronage.) Sat. I. VI. 51.

23. Lupinis. These were used to counterfeit money on the stage. "He knows a "coin from a counter."

24. Pro, "in proportion to." (As an instance of this construction after dignus, Gesner quotes Lucretius, v. 2.)

ib. Merentis=bene merentis; i. e. "my patron." Cp. 'merendo,' Virg. Æn. VI. 644.

25. Thus paraphrased by Lord Melbourne (see Hayward's Essays),—

'Tis late and I must haste away,
My usual hour of rest is near:
And do you press me yet to stay;
To stay, and revel longer here?

Then give me back the scorn of care
Which spirits light in health allow,
And give me back the dark brown hair
Which curled upon my even brow.

And give me back the sportive jest
Which once could midnight hours beguile;
The life that bounded in my breast,
And joyous youth's becoming smile.

And give me back the fervid soul
Which love enflamed with strange delight,
When erst I sorrowed o'er the bowl
At Chloe's coy and wanton flight.

'Tis late.....
But give me these, and I will stay,—
Will stay till morn, and revel here.

29. Volpecula. Bentley corrected this to nitedula, which would certainly, in strictness, make a better sense; and his conjecture is approved by Lachmann on Lucret. III. 1015; but the old fabulists kept little to probabilities or consistency in particulars, and the fox was the most frequent character introduced by them.

35. i. e. I like luxuries, nor, when I have them, do I affect to prefer humble life; yet I will not give up my independence for the sake of obtaining them.

ib. Somnum plebis is explained by Sat. II. II. 80. Comp. Carm. III. I. 21. (Comp. S. S. Eccl. v. 12.)

ib. Laudo satur may be compared with Juv. XI. 58,—'Nec laudem siliquas occultus ganeo.'

41. Hom. Odyss. δ. 601—605.

Ἵππους δ' εἰς Ἰθάκην οὐκ ἄξομαι.....

44. Parvum. Call. Fr. 179,—τοῖς μικκοῖς μικκὰ διδοῦσι θεοί.

46. Philippus. Lucius Marcius Philippus, well known for the altercation with Drusus and Crassus, described in Cic. de Orat. III. 1: and cp. Brutus, XCV. 326.

48. Carinas. See Cookesley's Map of Rome, p. 31.

50. Adrasum='tonsa cute,' Epist. I. XVIII. 7,—"with hair close cut." Compare the force of ad, in accido, aduro, adedo, etc. See No. VII. of Latin Etymology by Claudius, in Journal of Education, 1851. Orelli seems to interpret it as "just cut;" but (as Obbar objects) gives no authority.

54. Quo...patre.....patrono, i. e. whether he is ingenuus (comp. 'quibus est pater,' Ars P. 248; and Sat. I. VI. 29,) or libertus.

56. Præconem. The Roman præcones were employed at the comitia and all public assemblies, in reciting proclamations, edicts, laws; at public games, and the funerals; also at auctions. So, 'voci subjcere præconis,' Cic. de Off. II. XXIII. 10, is "to offer for sale." The office and its gains are slightly spoken of in Sat. I. VI. 66; on the other hand, Gallonius præco is noted for extravagance, Sat. II. II. 47. Juvenal implies that it was a low but lucrative calling, Sat. III. XXXIII. 157; VII. 6 (where see Mayor's note.)

57. Loco. Gr. ὅταν τύχῃ.

65. Tunicato. The poorer and especially the country people.

70. Ut libet="agreed"=ut videtur.

72. Dicenda tacenda,—ῥητὸν ἄῤῥητόν τ' ἔπος. Soph. Œd. C., 1001. 'Digna atque 'indigna relatu.' Virg. Æn. IX. 595.

76. Indictis...Latinis. The Latinæ Feriæ belonged to the class conceptivæ; they were annual, but on no fixed day: indicere, or concipere, was the technical word for fixing the day.

77. Impositus, i. e. "driving out with his patron."

79. Philippus may be compared with Eutrapelus, in E. I. XVIII. 31.

83. Ex nitido. With the same contrast, Cicero (de Senect. XVII.) uses nitōrem corporis.

ib. Fit rusticus. Cicero (the son) ends a letter to Tiro with jesting on this subject. Ad Fam. XVI. 21, ad fin.

84. Mera. So, 'mera scelera loquuntur,' Cic. ad Att. IX. XIII. 1. [O.]

92. Pol. On this and similar words, edepol, ecastor, see Marriott's instructive note on Ter. Ad. 289.

93–4. Quoted in Porson's Adversaria, as an imitation of Eur. Iph. T. 500,—τὸ μὲν δίκαιον δυστυχεῖς καλοίμεθ' ἄν.

94. Quod. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 141,—'Quod te per superos...oro miserere laborum.' Compare the usages quod si, quod nisi.

98. Ac pede. Probably this is only a poetic amplification of modulo, and the sense is simply,—"Let every one take his own measure" (Comp. moduli, Sat. II. III. 309.) Comp. Juv. XI. 34,—'Buccæ noscenda est mensura tuæ.'

'Metaphora ab iis desumpta qui corporis sui staturam numero pedum 'metiuntur.' Obbar, apud Orelli. Gesner and others refer the phrase to "the shoemaker's last," as the Gr. μὴ ὑπὲρ πόδα τὸ ὑπόδημα, as in Epist. I. X. 43, comparing (for the general sense) Cic. de Off. I. 31.

EPISTLE VIII.—AD CELSUM ALBINOVANUM.

A letter to Celsus, whom we may conclude, from the hint in the last line, to have shown some foolish vanity or elation at being promoted to the post of secretary, when on Tiberius' staff. The body of the letter consists of a self-reproaching description of the writer's own deficiencies, his aimless levity and lethargy of mind; a description serving to introduce and excuse the admonition to his friend.

Horace, if he must censure, does it covertly,—he is amiculus, docendus adhuc (see below, Ep. XVII. 3.) That his own character, however, was wanting in fixedness of purpose, he seems to have been sincerely conscious. (See the reflections in the opening of Sat. II. III. and Sat. II. VII. (vv. 22—29.)

This Epistle is to be compared with the Third, being written to one of the same suite (cohors); probably to the same Celsus as there mentioned, v. 15.

1. Gaudere.....gerere, a form of salutation (as again in v. 15.) Gr. χαίρειν καὶ εὖ πράττειν.

2. Rogata, "at my request," not rogata a Celso, as the next line (si quæret) shows.

3. Si quæret, quid agam. Comp. Ov. Am. I. XI. 13; and Trist. I. I. 17,—

'Si quis qui, quid agam, forte requirat erit,
'Vivere me dices, salvum tamen esse negabis.'

Ib. III. VIII. 6; and Theognis, 519,— ἦν δέ τις εἰρωτᾷ τὸν ἐμὸν βίον ὧδέ οἱ εἰπεῖν, ὡς εὖ μὲν χαλεπῶς, ὡς χαλεπῶς δὲ μάλ' εὖ.

12. The marked mention of Tibur in Horace's later poetry (here, for instance, and in Carm. IV. II. 31; IV. III. 10) has raised the question whether he had any residence there, either lent or leased to him. [O.] refers to Carm. II. XVIII. 14, as proving that he had but one country residence, and that situated in confiniis agri Sabini et Tiburtini. But granting that the ager Tiburtinus may have bordered on the ager Sabinus, there is no doubt that Horace's farm was at least ten or fifteen miles from Tibur itself. In fact, the nearest township was Varia (see E. I. XIV. 3,) eight miles beyond Tibur. Again, the life attributed to Suetonius speaks of his living 'plurimum in secessu ruris sui 'Sabini aut Tiburtini,' (aut, "or else," implies that the terms used are not synonymous, but distinctive) 'domusque ejus ostenditur circa Tiburni lucum.' Again, in Carm. III. IV. 22, Horace appears clearly to distinguish his Sabine residence from Tibur; nor does he throw out any hint of his Sabine valley being connected with Tibur, or owing any charm to it. Compare the detailed description in E. I. 16, and the incidental references to it in E. I. XVIII. 104; C. I. XXII. 9; III. I. 47.

EPISTLE IX.—AD CLAUDIUM NERONEM.

An introductory letter written to Tiberius, showing great tact in the avoidance of the difficulties of a false position. His friend Septimius, supposing him to be influential, presses him to write it. He believes he has no influence, and knows he has no authority to ask a favour. Forced, however, by the plea of friendship, he complies in terms as brief and decisive as they are unpresuming.

---

1. Nimirum...unus, "knows, no doubt, better than any one else," i. e. "than I "do;" as in v. 6. Unus, used as in Sat. II. VI. 57, and as with superlatives.

4. Legentis honesta. Equivalent to cautum dignos assumere, Sat. I. VI. 51, and 63. Honesta, neut. for masc., as obscura, Carm. I. XXXIV. 14. Cp. 'prima virorum,' 'summa ducum.' Lucr. I. 87; Ov. Am. I. IX. 37.

11. Frontis urbanæ, "of the unabashed front," i. e. effrontery. Frons is the seat of modesty. Cp. Æsch. Suppl. 198, μετωποσώφρων. Hence the phrase for becoming "shameless," frontem perfricare. Cp. Pers. v. 104,—'Perisse frontem de rebus.' Again, as rusticus is used for "bashful" (Cp. Cicero, Fam. V. XII. 1, 'pudor subrusticus,') so urbanus is "a man of the world," who cannot be turned from his request.

ib. Descendi. This verb may often mean "to undertake reluctantly," or, "with effort and condescension." So [O.] who quotes 'ad accusandum descendere,' Cic. Divin. in Cæc. I. 1. Obbar quotes Cic. Læl. XVII. 64; pro Quint. 16; Liv. XXIII. XIV. 3; and reprobates Bothe's interpretation,—'Descendi velut in 'arenam ad acquirenda præmia.' Yet this is probably the primary idea, from which comes that of attempting anything which requires effort or resolution (see on C. III. I. 11.)

13. The sum of the letter is contained in this line, according with Cicero's words ad Fam. XI. 16,—'Ponam in extremo quod sentiam.'

ib. Gregis. Cp. gregales, Cic. de Orat. II. 62. So 'in nostro, ut ita dicam, grege,' Cic. Læl. XIX. 69; and Ter. Eun. V. VIII. 54.

ib. Fortem...bonumque. This is a frequent formula. See Cic. ad Fam. XIII. LXXVII. 3; pro Milone, II. 4; ad Att. VIII. III. 1; Liv. XXII. LIX. 11.

EPISTLE X.—AD FUSCUM ARISTIUM.

A letter in praise of rural life: yet not so much on account of the real beauties of scenery, as of the happiness of disposition which prefers natural to artificial tastes. Men's natural wants (v. 12, sqq.) are met by the freedom, the freshness, the landscape of the country. The love of town-luxuries is a corruption which tacitly convicts itself (v. 22, sqq.); which punishes itself by its unsatisfied longings; and enslaves itself to habits that become a burden, though it can no more shake them off than the horse could shake off his rider when he had put himself in his power (v. 34, sqq.) Men should adapt their wants and wishes to their means and their position in life; the discomfort of not doing so is illustrated by comparison to shoes that do not fit the wearer (v. 42.) It is not the acquisition of wealth that will free us from discontent, or discomposure; but a superiority to its attractions in the resources of our own minds.

---

5. Annuimus, "we assent." But the word is thought to involve an allusion to the habit expressed by columbari, or the adv. columbatim, i. e. "billing and cooing."

6. Nidum, in agreement with the simile columbi.

9. Rumore secundo, i. e. "with one accord; with unanimous acclaim." See Virg. Æn. VIII. 90, and Heyne's note; and comp. 'clamore secundo,' Æn. X. 266.

12. Vivere nat....convenienter, a Stoic phrase. See Cic. Tusc. Qu. V. 28.

16. The Dog-star rises July 20. The Sun enters Leo July 23.

ib. Momenta, derived from moveo, must mean, as applied to the heavenly bodies, their "revolutions," or "periodic times:" here it may be construed, with some latitude and in connection with the next line, "vehemence," or "impulse."

22. Nempe, etc. i. e. the superiority of the country is proved by the desire rich men have of giving a country appearance to their houses. Of the desire for a country prospect (prospicit, v. 23*)*, Mæcenas' house was a conspicuous instance. Cp. Carm. III. XXIX. 6, sqq.

24. Expellas furca. This rustic metaphor is used by Cicero, 'furcilla extrudimur,' Att. XVI. 2. Compare in Greek the burlesque phrase δικροῖς ἐώθουν τὴν θεὸν ...κεκράγμασι, Aristoph. Pax, 637; and δικράνοις με ἐξεώθει, Lucian, Tim. 12. Compare the simple Homeric δαλῷ βεβλημένος εἴσθα θύραζε, Odyss. τ. 69.

ib. Tamen...recurret. Cp. Juv. XIII. 239,—

'Tamen ad mores natura recurrit
'Damnatos, fixa et mutari nescia.'

So. Cic. Tusc. V. XXVII. 78.. So Arist. Vesp. 1457,— τὸ γὰρ ἀποστῆναι χαλεπὸν φύσεος, ἣν ἔχει τις ἀεί.

25. Mala...fastidia, "your affected (non-natural) disdain."

26. Contendere, "to stretch side by side, and compare."

27. Aquinatem potantia...fucum, i. e. "home-dyed." Another Italian dye is mentioned, Ep. II. I. 207.

28. Propius medullis. Cp. Eur. Hipp. 255,—πρὸς ἀκρὸν μυελὸν ψυχῆς.

39. Metallis. Apparently a contemptuous term, as lamnæ in C. II. II. 2.

40. Vehit improbus. 'Improbus, hoc est, immodicus, intemperatus' [O.]; but Qu. Whether improbus does not attach itself to the verb? (See S. II. VI. 29.) Compare these instances from Virgil, G. I. 388,—'vocat improba;' Æn. II. 80,—'mendacemque improba finget;' Æn. IX. 62,—'improbus ira sævit.' So XI. 767; XII. 250.

46. Quam satis. Eur. Phœn. 562,—ἐπεὶ τά γ' ἀρκοῦνθ' ἱκανὰ τοῖσι σώφροσιν.

49. Dictabam. The imperfect is used, as, in the close of a letter, dabam, (e. g. Cic. ad Fam. XIV. 1.) Cp. canebam, Virg. Geor. IV. 559.

ib. Vacuna (see Ov. F. VI. 307) was a Sabine divinity, answering to the Roman Victoria; but her name is played on here, as if derived from vacare, and signifying "indolence." See Varronianus, p. 139.

50. So Cicero, ad Q. Fr. II. 14,—'Ego me in Cumano et Pompeiano, præterquam quod sine te ceterum satis commode oblectabam.'

EPISTLE XI.—AD BULLATIUM.

Bullatius seems to have been one of those who, when sated of home and weary of themselves, think to escape or dispel their ennui by travelling. On this mistaken notion Horace moralises. A cheerful mind and a willingness to be pleased is requisite for the enjoyments of life: a life busied with frivolous aims, or given up to energetic idleness, finds the fatigue of toil, without its repose: more change of place and scene cannot soothe or satisfy the inward feeling.

(Compare the remarks on 'Foreign Travel,' in Rogers' 'Italy,' and Coleridge's little poem on 'Work without Hope,' ending—'Hope without an object cannot live.')

---

3. Majora minorave, i. e. 'sive majora fama sive minora.'

8. "Yet even there I could be content to live and tempt the seas no more."

9. 'The world forgetting, by the world forgot.'—Pope's Eloisa.

10. Cp. Lucret. II. 1,—

'Suave mari magno turbantibus æquora ventis
'E terra magnum alterius spectare laborem.'

17. Incolumi, "in good (esp. mental) health." 'Integro, sanæ mentis homini.'—Schol.

ib. Facit, quod, "is just as (little) suitable as," &c. Prop. IV. I. 20,—'Non faciet capiti dura corona meo.' Facio is used in this sense also, with ad following. [O.]

18. Pœnula. (Gr. φαινόλης, in N. T. 2 Ep. to Tim. IV. 13.) "A sleeveless cloak," worn in rainy weather, and in travelling. (See Mayor's full account of it, note on Juv. V. 79.)

ib. Campestre. Thuc. I. 6,—διαζώματα περὶ τὰ αἰδοῖα, [O.] i. e. the light band or drawers used by the Romans, when stripped for the games of the Campus.

20. Cp. Ov. Trist. I. V. 27,—'Dum juvat et vultu ridet Fortuna sereno.'

28. Strenua...inertia. 'Who, borne about
'In chariots and sedans, know no fatigue
'But that of idleness.' Cowper.

ib. Navibus atque quadrigis, i. e. "excursions by sea and land." The naves, "yachts," here spoken of would be private property. Cp. E. I. I. 93. So quadrigæ were perhaps commonly used for driving or display; they are seldom mentioned but with reference to the games, or as used in war, though Cicero (Orat. 157*)* speaks of postmeridianas quadrigas. The words answering most nearly to our travelling carriage seem to have been reda, and the smaller and expeditious cisium.

29. Cp. Juv. IX. 131.

30. Ulubris, i. e. "anywhere." Ulubræ was a little town, probably in Campania: vacuis Ulubris, Juv. X. 102.

EPISTLE XII.—AD ICCIUM.

A letter to Iccius, who had formerly been devoted to philosophical pursuits, and in the enjoyment of literary ease, until he gave way to a turn for speculation, and embarked in the Arabian enterprise of Æl. Gallus, (Carm. I. XXIX.) The failure of that expedition perhaps reduced him to poverty, and his abilities found a new direction: he became the agent for Agrippa's estates in Sicily. He was ill at ease (v. 3) in this position. It is inferred from this letter that he felt and complained that this agency promised him no eventual wealth, and yet that it absorbed his time and energies; that it, in fact, disappointed both the objects he had formerly had in view, viz. the prosecution of intellectual studies, and the acquisition of a wealthy independence.

Horace meets this complaint with kind and sensible reflections, reminding him that he has all his actual wants supplied, that health and temperance need nothing more, and could gain nothing more from fortune. Upon his love for study he congratulates him, comparing him favourably with Democritus, in being able to combine the execution of practical and necessary duties with sublimer theories and speculative research. He goes on to request his good offices for his friend Grosphus; perhaps desiring for Iccius' own sake to engage his feelings by new society, and by the opportunity of kind and useful action. The letter ends with the last news of importance from the East.

5, 6. Taken from Theognis, 719, (verses quoted as Solon's, in the opening of Plutarch's Life),— ἴσον τοι πλουτοῦσιν, ὅτῳ πολὺς ἄργυρός ἐστιν.....

..... καὶ ᾧ τὰ δέοντα πάρεστι γαστρί τε καὶ πλευραῖς καὶ ποσὶν ἁβρὰ παθεῖν.

7. In medio positorum abstemius, i. e. "abstaining from what is within your reach." In medio positus is like the Greek κείμενος ἐν μέσῳ, as in Demosth. c. Phil. I. 7, (p. 41),—εἰς τὸ μέσον καταθείς. Id. c. Leptinem, XIII. (p. 488.) See Sat. I. II. 108, where the same phrase is used, and in opposition to fugientia.

8. Urtica. Pers. VI. 69,—'Mihi festa luce coquatur Urtica.' See Plin. N. H. XXI. XV. 55. (Some commentators interpret the word of a fish, referring to v. 21; but there the two dishes are contrasted, not, as here, classed together. Besides, the urtica marina was a delicacy).

ib. Ut, i. e. "although."

12. Cp. Cic. de Fin. V. XXIX. 87. This story is told of Anaxagoras by Plutarch, in the Life of Pericles.

13. Peregre est animus. Cp. ὁ νοῦς μὲν ἔξω, Arist. Ach. 398.

14. Cum tu, etc. The sense is,—"You, wiser than Democritus, can amid engrossing "business find time and thought for lofty speculations and scientific inquiry."

16. Quæ mare, etc. 'Similes loci sunt, Virg. Geor. II. 475, sqq.; Propert. IV. IV. 25.' [O.]

18. Premat obscurum. Virg. Æn. IV. 81,—'Lumenque obscura vicissim Luna premit.'

19. Concordia discors. Cp. Ov. Met. I. 430—433:

'Quippe ubi temperiem sumpsere humorque calorque,
'Concipiunt, et ab his oriuntur cuncta duobus;
'Cumque sit ignis aquæ pugnax, vapor humidus omnes
'Res creat, et discors concordia festibus apta est.'

Pope expresses the principle thus,—'All Nature's difference keeps all Nature's peace,' Essay on Man, IV. 56; and less concisely in his Windsor Forest,—

'The world harmoniously composed:
'Where order in variety we see;
'And where, though all things differ, all agree.'

So Ben Jonson, in Cynthia's Revels, Act V. Sc. II.,—'All concord's born of contraries' Burke applies it strikingly in his French Revolution (p. 81, 8vo. edit.),—You had that action and counteraction, which, in the natural and in 'the political world, from the reciprocal struggle of discordant parties draws 'out the harmony of the universe.'

20. Empedocles of Agrigentum, B. C. 450. See Lucret. I. 717, sqq. His doctrine as to the elementary forces of repulsion and attraction (νεῖκος καὶ φιλία) is thought to be alluded to in v. 19, and his (Pythagorean) prohibitions as to diet in v. 20.

21. Seu pisces seu porrum, i. e. 'seu laute seu parce,' Schol. But it means more probably—whether you follow the Stoics or Pythagoreans. [O.] points out that fish were a common and cheap diet in Sicily.

ib. Trucidas. Cp. Ov. F. III. 340,—'Cædenda est hortis cruta cepa meis.'

22. Ultro. Some take this with petet, and the two words are often joined. (See Bowyer's note in Combe.) But it is better, with Obbar, to explain it,—"Let "your favour be so free as it seems unsolicited, prompted as much by your "own wish as his request." So Cic. ad Fam. XIII. 29,—'Omnia quæ potui... 'impetrare si petiissem, ultro te ad me detulisse putabo, si impetravero.'

27. Armenius cecidit. The history of these revolutions in Armenia and Parthia may be seen in the opening chapters of Tacitus' Annals, Book II; and in Merivale, Vol. IV. Ch. XXXIV; who finds an explanation of this and the next line in the coins of this period, representing 'a trousered Parthian presenting the emperor with a standard or a bow.' As Ovid says,—'Parthe, refers aquilas, victos quoque porrigis arcus.' Fast, V. 593.

27. Jus imperiumque. These words seem to belong to Cæsaris; "he submitted to the authority of Cæsar." Orelli cites,—'In jus ditionemque recepit.' Liv. XXI. 61; and 'imperia accipiontes, Tac. Hist. II. 19.

28. Genibus minor. Cp. 'Genua amplexus genibusque volutans,' Virg. Æn. III. 607.

EPISTLE XIII.—AD VINIUM ASELLAM.

Contains instructions for the presentation of a volume of poems to Augustus, with some punning on the name of Asella, who was to present it, and humorous allusions to the awkward, importunate eagerness with which would-be authors thrust themselves upon the leisure, and claimed the patronage of the great.

(The epistle II. I. 214—231, as referred to in v. 3., contains a fine passage illustrative of this subject.)

---

3. Cp. Ov. Trist. I. I. 92, (on the same subject),—

'Si poteris vacuo tradi, si cuncta videbis
'Mitia, si vires fregerit ira suas.'

So Cic. ad Fam. XI. 16,—'Itaque ei præcepi, quem ad te misi, ut tempus 'observaret epistolæ tibi reddendæ. Nam quemadmodum coram, qui ad nos 'intempestive adeunt, molesti sæpe sunt, sic epistolæ offendunt non loco 'redditæ.'

8. Asinæ...cognomen. Cicero quotes a similar pun used by Scipio (when Censor, 142 B.C.) against Asellus. De Orat. II. 64, (258.)

10. Lamas, taken from a line of Ennius,—

'Silvarum saltus latebras lamasque lutosas.'

11. Victor propositi=victis viæ difficultatibus. [G.] Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 440,—'Sic denique victor,' etc.

12. Sic...ne. Ne expresses, not a consequence, but a caution.

14. Glomus, acc. of glomus, -eris. The first syllable is long in Lucr. I. 360.

ib. Pyrrhia. Lachmann, on Lucr. VI. 971, condemns this form as corrupt, 'neque Græcæ neque Romanæ feminæ nomen.' Obbar, following a Scholiast's hint, represents it as a made-up name, to signify 'femina rufa, russei coloris, 'propter vivacitatem sic dicta. Apposite igitur vinosa.' Lucian (in Vit. Auct.) has the masc. form Πυρρίας, as a burlesque upon Pyrrho. The masc. name Byrrhia is in Terence's Andria. Pyrrhia is said by the Scholiast to be a character in a play of Titinius.

15. Tribulis, i. e. "a country guest," invited by the condescension of a great man in his own tribe.

EPISTLE XIV.—AD VILICUM SUUM.

Another eulogy of rural life, but varying in tone and style from the Tenth Epistle, as being addressed to a person of inferior rank and different habits. Horace sketches his own life and tastes (vv. 32—39) with good humour, and reminds the bailiff that others would be glad to change with him; but that the rule best for all is to keep steady to the situation which they can best fulfil.

---

3. Quinque...patres, i. e. the tenant farmers on the estate, who would naturally resort to Varia on business, or on market days.

ib. Variam, a country town, eight miles beyond Tibur, on the Via Valeria. So the Schol.

4. Spinas. Cp Shakspeare, 'brakes of vice,' Meas. for Meas. Act II. Sc. 1.

8. Istuc, i. e. "whore you are." So iste, v. 23.

9. Spatiis...claustra. A race term.

14. Mediastinus, "a drudge," in medio, i. e. "at any one's call; a slave of all work."

19. Tesca, or tesqua. A Sabine word for "wild waste country."

26. Et tamen, etc. "Yet your complaint arises from no want of occupation."

28. Strictis frondibus. Virg. Ecl. IX. 61,—'Agricolæ stringunt frondes.' This gathering of leaves was called frondatio; the gatherer, frondator. Virg. Ec. I. 57.

37. Obliquo oculo. Virg. Æn. XI. 337,—'obliqua invidia.' Ὄμματι λοξῷ, Callim. Ep. XXII; where see Blomf. note.

38. Limat may mean here "impairs;" prop. "files away;" lima, "a file," A.P. 291. Cp. limatior, Sat. I. X. 65. Lachmann (on Lucr. III. 11) supposes the word to be chosen for the sake of a play upon its meaning,—'Horatio ludere licuit 'quasi limi oculi a lima dicerentur quemadmodum et Plautus ludit, cum dolum 'dolari dicit.' On the "evil eye" (obliquo oculo,) see Bacon, Essay IX. opening paragraph.

40. Cum servis, sc. urbanis, as implied in urbana.

43. Ephippia bos. Cicero, ad Att. V. 15, quotes this proverb in substance,—'Clitellæ 'bovi sunt impositæ.'

44. ἕρδοι τις ἣν ἕκαστος εἰδείη τέχνην. Arist. Vesp. 1431. 'Quam quisque norit 'artem in hac se exerceat.' Cic. Tusc. Qu. I. 18.

EPISTLE XV.—AD NUMONIUM VALAM.

A rambling letter of inquiry, whether Velia or Salernum has the most attractions as a watering-place. Mention has been made before of winter visits to the seaside (Epist. VII. 11,) and Baiæ was the most fashionable resort, but was now, by advice of Musa, and after adoption of the "water-cure," to be given up. The character of Mænius is described (vv. 26—41) as exemplifying (though upon a lower level of life, and by a somewhat coarse parallel,) the writer's own power of contenting himself with a frugal, but of relishing a sumptuous fare.

---

1. Quæ sit, etc. The governing clause is in v. 25.

ib. Velia, on the coast of Lucania, founded by the fugitive Phocæans. The Greek name is Ὑέλη, Herod. I. 167. Another form is Elea, famous in philosophy for the Eleatic school of Parmenides and Zeno.

ib. Vala. It is conjectured that he may be the same with Vala Numonius, lieutenant of Varus, who, in the great defeat of A. D. 9, 'rode off with his 'squadrons, in the vain hope of escaping, by thus abandoning his comrades,' (Creasy's Battles, p. 194.) The date of this Epistle is set at B. C. 23, when Musa's reputation was at its acmè. Vala, if the above conjecture is well founded, must have been very young then, and, as is implied in v. 46, wealthy.

1. Salernum, now Salerno, in S. Campania, and supplying the modern name for Sinus Pœstanus.

3. Antonius Musa, the physician, famous for his advocacy of cold water, and his success in trying it on Augustus. But cp. Plin. XIX. 38.

5. Murteta, "the myrtle-groves." A place of cure for the invalid frequenters of Baiæ. Some natural exhalations rose there, which were used to form a kind of dry vapour bath. These are probably the sulphura of v. 7, (see Bentley's note,) though others suppose sulphurous springs to be meant. Compare Ov. A. A. I. 256.

11. Cumas. Juv. III. 5,—'Janua Baiarum est.'

12. Læva stomachosus habena. Compare this construction with E. II. II. 72. (See also Wagner on Virg. Æn. IV. 517.)

13. Here ends the first parenthesis, from v. 2; a second begins in v. 16, and continues to v. 24.

14. Utrum populum, i. e. at Velia or Salernum.

24. Phœax, like one of Alcinous' court. Comp. Epist. I. II. 28.

27. Fortiter. [O.] compares Pers. VI. 21.

29. Impransus. Comp. Theocr. XV. 147,—ὠνὴρ ὄξος ἅπαν, πεινᾶντι δὲ μηδὲ ποτένθῃς.

31. Compare Arist. Equ. 248,—φάραγγα καὶ Χάρυβδιν ἁρπαγῆς.

36. Lamna candente. This was a familiar mode of torture. Cp. Cic. in Verr. V. LXIII. 163,—'Ignes candentesque lamminæ ceteriquo cruciatus admovebantur.' See also Propert. IV. VII. 35; Juv. XIV. 22.

37. Corrector Bestius, i. e. "he devoured his humble fare, and railed with the "acrimony of Bestius against epicures."

39. Compare Arist. Vesp. 1268.

ib. Miror...si. So above, E. I. XII. 12; and again, E. I. XVII. 26; A. P. 424.

40. Comedunt bona, "eat up their estate." Sat. I. II. 8. (Cp. Juv. XI. 40.)

41. Volva. Juv. XI. 81.

42. Laudo, "I am content with." Θῆσσαν τράπεζαν αἴνεσαι. Eur. Alc. 2.

EPISTLE XVI.—AD QUINCTIUM.

A description of the Sabine farm (vv. 1—16.) The moralist then passes on to the sources of enjoyment,—real enjoyment, as distinguished from the show of it, which relies on public opinion. This false show, the desire of standing well with the public, is further traced and analysed in its love of flattery, its acceptance of praise not justly its due (vv. 25—31.) If it is pleaded that this is a natural liking (v. 32,) it must then be shown to be a weak and foolish one (vv. 33—38.) He whose honour depends not on his own sterling merit, but the public gift, subjects himself to mortification whenever that gift is reclaimed; he who is pleased with flattery, will be hurt by obloquy. The worthlessness of such a character is then shown, and the confusion existing in many minds between the love of goodness in itself, and the abstinence, which circumstances enforce, from wickedness (vv. 40—60.) Men of principle feel that they have a post of honour to defend; men of the contrary stamp are renegades (v. 67,) fit only for mean and slavish employments. The free and fearless independence of the good is illustrated, from the dialogue of the tyrant Pentheus and his supposed prisoner, in the Bacchæ of Euripides.

1. Quincti. This may be the Q. Hirpinus of Carm. II. XI, but there is no means of identifying him.

5. Ni dissocientur, "there is a range of hills, just broken by a valley." (See note on Carm. II. XVII. 28.)
The farm stood upon the slope of a range of hills, intersected by a narrow valley, running due north and south.—(For a complete description of the site, its identification, and present features, reference must be made to the letter de Villa Horatii, printed in the Life by Dean Milman.)

7. Vaporet. 'Non tam tepefaciat.....quum propria sign. vapore obducat, ut fit 'vesperi sub cælo Italico.' Orelli.

9. This seems to mean hedges of wild cherry and sloe. The corna are mentioned Sat. II. II. 57. Comp. Virg. Æn. III. 649,—'Victum infelicem, bacas lapidosa- 'que corna;' and, in Geo. II. 34, they are said to be grafted on pruni.

15. Dulces etiam...amœnæ. Dulces expresses the poet's own liking; amœnæ, the charm of the landscape in itself.

17. Esse quod audis. Cp. Æsch. Sept. c. Theb. 592,—Οὐ γὰρ δοκεῖν ἄριστος ἀλλ' εἶναι θέλει. And compare the maxim of Socrates in Xen. Mem. II. VI. 39; and Cic. de Off. II. XII. 43.

19. Ne cui...plusquam tibi. Cp. Cic. ad Fam. II. 7,—'Nemo est qui tibi sapientius 'suadere possit teipso.....Tecum loquere, te adhibe in consilium...'

19—24. These sentiments are drawn out at length in Persius, Sat. IV. 43—52; and Sat. III. 98, sqq.

23. Unctis, sc. 'jure et adipe,' Ov. A. A. III. 755.

27. Tene, etc. A fragment quoted from Varius.

35. Tristisque recedo. Lucr. III. 995,— 'Sisyphus in vita quoque nobis ante oculos est,
'Qui petere a populo fasces sævasque secures
'Imbibit, et semper victus tristisque recedit.'

37. Contendat. Ov. Met. II. 855.

43. Persius, IV. 14,—'Summa nequiquam pelle decorus.'

48. Corvos. Comp. the Gr. phrase, ἐς κόρακας.

49. Frugi. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Qu. III. VIII. 18; and IV. XVI. 36,—'Ut jam proverbii 'locum obtineret, hominem frugi omnia recte facere.' Cp. Sat. II. V. 77—81, where it may be translated "discreet, modest." Frugi was a cognomen of Piso, Cos. 133, B. C., and his descendants: (="a man of honour," Biog. Dict.) The opposite to it is nequam="good for nothing." Cp. Plaut. Most. 101,—'Nequam homo, indiligens.....instrenuos.' So Plin. XIX. 4,—'Nequam esse 'matrem familias ubi indiligens esset hortus.' (See Hildyard's note on Plaut. Men. 7, where facere nequiter=cessare, "to do nothing.")

51. Milvus. This is said by some to be the shining gurnard. But more weight is due to the opinion of Orelli, who calls it 'piscis rapax ex doradum genere;' and, similarly, Doëring supposes it to be a Coryphæna. These two names indicate the same fish; it is of the mackerel family, the dolphin of the ancients. It is one of the fishes, with the changes of whose colours, when dying, the luxurious Romans used to gloat their fancy. (Bohn's ed. of Cuvier, p. 290.) Pliny (N. H. IX. 43) mentions the milvus and the hirundo as two kinds of flying fish, but gives no description. The hirundo is supposed to be one of the gurnards: they are common in the Mediterranean. Ovid (Halieut. 95) has,—'nigro tergore milvi;' where however Lachmann and Merkel read iuli.

52—54. Compare Cic. de Off. III. 8, sqq.; from Plato, Rep. II. 3, (pag. II. 359.) Comp. Æsch. Eum. 550,—ἐκὼν δ' ἀνάγκας ἄτερ δίκαιος ὢν οὐκ ἄνολβος ἔσται.

54. Miscebis sacra profanis. Comp. Carm. I. XVIII. 10. This phrase, for plunging into crime without restriction, may be compared with the Greek πανοῦργος, πανουργία. So in Virg. Geor. I. 505,—'Fas versum atque nefas.' The Greek equivalents for the two adjectives may be seen in Thuc. II. 52,—ἐς ὀλιγωρίαν ἐτράποντο καὶ ἱερῶν καὶ ὁσίων.

57. Vir bonus (as in v. 40), so called according to the popular definition. For the true vir bonus, see v. 73.

60. Comp. Pers. II. 5,—

'At bona pars procerum tacita libavit acerra:
'Haud cuivis promptum est murmurque humilesque susurros
'Tollere de templis, et aperto vivere voto?
'Mens bona, fama, fides; hæc clare et ut audiat hospes:
'Illa sibi introrsum et sub lingua immurmurat.'

See the Merchant's prayer to Mercury, in Ovid, Fast. v. 679; and cp. Eur. El. 809,—τἀναντί' ἤυχετ' οὐ γεγωνίσκων λόγους.

ib. Laverna. The tutelar goddess of thieves, hence called laverniones. The most probable derivation proposed is that from λαθεῖν, or latere; compare Donaldson (in Varron. and Cratylus) on Latinus and Lavinus, liber and ἐλεύθερος, as identical forms.

64. In triviis fixum. So Pers. v. 111,—

'Inque luto fixum possis transcendere nummum.'

66. See Euripides, as quoted on S. I. 1. 76.

67. Cp. Plato, Menex. 18,—ὥσπερ ἐν πολέμῳ μὴ λείπειν τὴν τάξιν τὴν τῶν προγόνων.

69. i. e. "If he is worthless as a man, he may yet be useful as a menial."

70. Pascat...aretque. Eur. El. 252,—σκαφεύς τις ἢ βουφορβός.

73. Penthei, etc. Taken from Euripides, Bacchæ, 492—498:

εἴφ' ὅτι παθεῖν δεῖ, τί με τὸ δεινὸν ἐργάσει;

. . . . . .

εἱρκταῖσί τ' ἔνδον σῶμα σὸν φυλάξομεν.
λύσει μ' ὁ δάιμων αὐτὸς, ὅταν ἐγὼ θέλω.

The intermediate lines are not adopted or translated by Horace. It is observable that Euripides, in v. 641, as it were suggests this allegory, when Dionysus says of himself,—πρὸς σοφοῦ γὰρ ἀνδρὸς ἀσκεῖν σώφρον' εὐοργησίαν.

75. Bona. See Cic. Paradox. I. 8.

79. Linea. The calx, or chalk line at the end of the race course, as in the phrase 'ad carceres a calce revocari.' Cic. de Sen. XXIII. Cp. Propert. IV. 2,—'Hæc spatiis ultima creta meis.' Gr. γραμμή, Eurip. Antig. Fr. 13,—ἐπ' ἀκρὰν ἥκομεν γραμμὴν κακῶν. Op. Cic. Tusc. I. VIII. 15. And so, but without the race metaphor, Soph. Trach. 1170,— ἔφασκε μόχθων τῶν ἐφεστώτων ἐμοὶ λύσιν τελεῖσθαι, κἀδόκουν πράξειν καλῶς.

τὸ δ' ἦν ἄρ' οὐδὲν ἄλλο πλὴν θανεῖν ἐμέ, τοῖς γὰρ θανοῦσι μόχθος οὐ προσγίγνεται.

EPISTLE XVII.—AD SCÆVAM.

The subject here is (majoribus uti) intimacy with the great; a thing not necessarily to be desired (vv. 6—10), yet not without its advantages of comfort and of influence (vv. 11, 12.) This point is argued out in the persons, and by the examples, of Diogenes and Aristippus (vv. 13—32.) Real distinction implies merit (v. 33); so, in its degree, does success in raising oneself above one's equals. Some refrain from attempting to do so for fear of failure, some from consciousness of incapacity; yet the prize, if gained, is worth gaining (vv. 35—42.) In keeping up the position gained, modesty and discretion are required; a temper obtrusive and querulous defeats itself (v. 43, sqq.)

---

1. Scæva. An unknown person.

1—3. Cp. Cic. de Fin. III. II. 6.

6—11. Cp. Cic. de Off. I. 21,—'Et facilior et tutior...vita est otiosorum; fructuosior autem hominum generi et ad claritatem amplitudinemque aptior eorum 'qui se ad rempublicam et ad res magnas gerendas accommodaverunt.'

6. Quies...somnus. Broken in upon at Rome by the early officia, as in Mart. XII. LXVIII,— 'Matutino cliens, urbis mihi causa relictæ,

. . . . . .

'Otia me somnusque juvant quæ magna negarit
'Roma mihi.'

Or by business calls, as in Sat. I. I. 10. There is a tacit comparison intended here, between living in a great city, and courting the society of great men.

7. Cp. Ov. Nux, 87,—

'Non hominum strepitus audit non illa rotarum,
'Non a vicina pulverulenta via est.'

Gesner compares Umbricius' complaint,—

.....'Nam quæ meritoria somnum
'Admittunt? Magnis opibus dormitur in urbe.'

8. Caupona, i. e. the vicinity to a noisy tavern.

9. Ferentinum, a town of the Hernici, on the Via Labicana.

10. It was the maxim of Epicurus, λάθε βιώσας. Cp. 'Bene qui latuit bene vixit,' Ov. Trist. III. IV. 25; and Eurip. Iph. in Aul. 17—19:

ζηλῶ δ' ἀνδρῶν ὃς ἀκίνδυνον βίον ἐξεπέρασ' ἀγνὼς ἀκλεής.

Cp. Lucian, Necyom. 21.

11. i. e. "To gain influence for your friend's sake or your own."

12. Sicous ad unctum. Properly perhaps of a guest coming "hungry to a feast." (So 'unctius,' Epist. I. XV. 44; Ars P. 422.) Here, of a poor man to a wealthy. A proverbial phrase, it may be. But cp. Eur. El. 239, (and Paley's note.)

13. These lines are an "encounter of wits" between Diogenes and Aristippus, (for a description of whom Lucian's Βίων πρᾶσις, 8—12, may be referred to.)

20. Ἵππος με φέρει, βασιλεύς με τρέφει—a Greek saying, attributed to an officer serving with Philip of Macedon.

22. Nullius. Is this masculine or neuter? The masculine makes the better antithesis to dante minor. So [O.], who quotes Diog. Laert. VI. 55. Obbar quotes Cic. Læl. IX. 30,—'Ut nullo egeat.'

25. Duplici panno,—διπλόον εἶμα σόφοιο
Διογένευς. Antipater, Epigr.

Cp. Milton's phrase in Comus, 707,—'Budge doctors of the Stoic fur.'

33, 34. Cp. Juv. X. 133,—

'Bellorum exuviæ...

. . . . . .

'Humanis majora bonis creduntur.'

35. Cp. Ter. Ad. Prol. 18, sqq.

'Eam laudem hic ducit maximam, quom illis placet
'Qui vobis universis et populo placent.'

36. Another Greek proverb,—οὐ παντὸς ἀνδρὸς εἰς Κόρινθον ἔσθ' ὁ πλοῦς.

37. Cp. the story of Sir Walter Ralcigh, and Queen Elizabeth's rejoindor:
'Fain would I climb, but that I fear to fall.'
'If thy heart fail thee then, climb not at all.'

41, 42. i. e. "If there is any reality in merit, then he who makes the trial has a "right to claim the credit of success."

42. Experiens, sc. 'qui omnia experitur.' Cic. pro Clu. VIII. 13,—'A. Aurius vir fortis et experiens.' C. Verr. III. XXI. 53; Ov. Met. XIV. 159.

45. Rerum caput, sc. 'plus ferre.' 'Verba distat...rapias per ἐπεξήγησιν interposita sunt.' Orelli.

ib. Erat. Imperfect, for present tense. Gr. τοῦτ' ἄρ' ἦν ἐκεῖνο, κ.τ.λ. (So Ars P. 19.)

49. Quadra, "a square" of a cake or loaf; hence, "a share." Virg. Æn. VII. 114; Juv. V. 2; Mart. IX. XCI. 17; Seneca, Benef. IV. 29.

55. Refert. Cp. Tac. Ann. I. 26,—'Easdem artes Drusum rettulisse.'

ib. Meretricis acumina. Cp. Plaut. Trucul. I. I. 32, sqq.; Ib. Mostell. I. III. 128; Ov. A. A. I. 431, sqq.; Mart. XI. L.

ib. Catellam. Dimin. of catena, as, from corona, corolla. Some take this as a diminutive of catulus (cp. the masc., S. II. III. 259), "a pet dog;" quoting Mart. I. CX; III. LXXXII; XIV. CLXXXIX; Prop. IV. III.'55; Juv. VI. 654.

60. Osirim. An adjuration, betokening an Egyptian origin for these vagrants (πλάνοι), or at least for many of them.

62. Rauca=ad ravim.—Schol.

EPISTLE XVIII.—AD LOLLIUM.

This epistle seems a sort of counterpart to the last. Though the friendship of the great is worth having, it is not to be courted by a supple dereliction of candour and honesty: nor again is a rude and slovenly manner to be adopted as implying sincerity; or freedom to be displayed by perpetual contradiction (vv. 1—20.) Again, there should be no vying with the patron in expense, or display, or vanity (vv. 21—30); nor prying into his secrets (v. 37); nor disregard of his tastes and amusements (v. 39, sqq.): he has a right to expect a cheerful and ready sympathy in respect of them; and Lollius' sharing in them is natural to his position, and accordant with his former habits (v. 52, sqq.) The interest will be mutual and repaid (v. 65.) Add to all this, discretion in speech and in praise of others (v. 68, sqq.), congeniality of temper (v. 89, sqq.), constant self-improvement and study (v. 96, sqq.), of the questions that concern and promote tranquillity of mind. These questions the poet himself (v. 104, sqq.), has partly answered, and this tranquillity he has found in the undisturbed seclusion of his Sabine home.

---

1. Liberrime. Cp. Sat. I. III. 52; and the description of a scurra in Sat. I. IV. 87. The epithet, however, need not be restricted to the meaning "free-spoken;" it may express his real independence of character, the libertas mera, which others only affected.

7. Tonsa cute, i. e. "a cropped head," sometimes the mark of an economist; here of a sloven, who is careless of appearances. Persius marks the Stoics as 'detonsa juventus.' Sat. III. 54.

9. This is the definition given by Aristotle, Eth. II. 5,—ἔστιν ἄρα ἡ ἀρετὴ ἕξις προαιρετικὴ ἐν μεσότητι οὖσα...μεσότης δὲ δύο κακιῶν τῆς μὲν καθ' ὑπερβολήν, τῆς δὲ κατ' ἔλλειψιν. ("Virtue is a deliberate habit, lying in a mean,—a mean between two faults, one of excess, one of defect.")

ib. Utrimque reductum, a phrase adopted from Lucret. V. 839.

13. Dictata, "his lesson." Cp. Cæsar's saying (given in Suetonius, J. Cæs. 77),—'Sullam nescisse litteras qui dictaturam deposuerit.'

14. Reddere. Cic. N. D. I. XXVI. 72,—'Ista a vobis quasi dictata redduntur, quæ Epicurus oscitans alucinatus est.'

15. Lana...caprina, i. e. "any trifle." Cp. ὄνου πόκας, Ar. Ran. 186; ὀρνίθων γάλα, Vesp. 508 ("of rare things.")

18. Pretium ætas altera sordet. Engl. "not for the world."

19. Castor...Dolichos, gladiators of the day.

20. Minuci, al. Numici. Nothing is known of this road: it has been, upon conjecture, ascribed to Minucius Augurinus, the famous præfectus annonæ of B. C. 439. See the history, and his medal, in Biogr. Dict.

21. Damnosa, "ruinous." 'Veneris damnosa voluptas,' Ov. Pont. I. X. 33.

22. Supra vires. Cp. Juv. III. 180,—'Hic ultra vires habitus nitor.'

25. Decem vitiis instructior, i. e. "ten times worse."

30. Arta...toga. Cp. e contr. Epod. IV. 8. So in Epist. I. XIX. 13, exigua toga marks the strict simplicity of Cato.

31. Eutrapelus. A name given to P. Volumnius. Cp. Cic. ad Fam. VII. 32, who compliments him on the εὐτραπελία of his letters. See Trench's Synonyms, in voc. εὐτραπελία.

35. Nummos al. pascet, "he will borrow money." Cp. Pers. V. 149,— 'Ut nummi quos hic quincunce modesto,' (i. e. at 5 per cent.)

'Nutrieras, pergant avidos sudare deunces.'
(i. e. 11 per cent.) See note on Sat. I. II. 14

The meaning of the metaphor is, that usury gives growth and increase to the principal; [O.] compares Arist. Pol. I. III. 23,—ὁ τόκος αὐτὸ (sc. τὸ νόμισμα) ποιεῖ πλέον. So Aristoph. Nubes, 1286. Compare Shakesp. Merchant of Ven. Act I. Sc. III:

'Is your gold and silver ewes and rams?'—
'I cannot tell: I make it breed as fast.'

Vivum is used by Cicero (pro Flacc. 37) as a term for "capital." Conductus is used for "borrowed" in Sat. I. II. 9.

41. Amphionis atque Zethi. See Eurip. Antiopa, Fr. 25.

47. Inhumanæ, "unsociable." Contrast humanitatem, Cic. de Orat. I. 7, (27); and humanissime, Cic. ad Fam. XVI. 21.

ib. Senium, "moroseness." Cp. Epod. XIII. 5, senectus. Gesner comp. Epist. II. II. 82,—'insenuitque libris.'

53. Clamore. Cp. 'clamore secundo,' Virg. Æn. V. 491.

ib. Coronæ, "the ring of spectators," as in Virg. Æn. IX. 508—551; as also in Ars P. 381. Cp. Pind. Ol. IX. 93,—διήρχετο κύκλον ὅσσᾳ βοᾷ.

54. Sævam militiam, "real warfare," as opposed to the games of the Campus Martius (prælia campestria.)

57. Siquid abest, "if there is anything yet unconquered." Cp. Ov. A. A. I. 177,—

'Ecce parat Cæsar domito, quod defuit, orbi
'Addere.'

57. Adjudicat, i. e. "makes over to, reduces under, the power of Rome." The verb is more properly a synonym of assigno, E. II. 1. 8, and used of determining disputed territories. [O.] quotes Cic. de Off. I. x. 33.

58. Ac, nec. These two particles are closely and properly joined together. See E. I. 1. 13; I. XIX. 26; II. 1. 208. [Obbar.]

59. Extra numerum...modumque; lit. "out of time and tune," i. e. unbecoming. Cp. Gr. πλημμελής, πλημμελέω. Cp. the contrary phrase, in numerum (="keeping time,") as in Virg. G. IV. 175.

64. Alterutrum. Hom. Il. v. 303,—ἑτέροισι δὲ κῦδος ἔδωκαν.

66. Utroque...pollice, i. e. "heartily." Cp. Juv. III. 36,—'verso pollice;' the thumb being popularly used to express decision for or against: ('Pollices cum faveamus premere etiam proverbio jubemur.' Plin. N. H. XXVIII. II. 5.)

71. Volat. ἔπεα πτερόεντα. Cp. Plaut. Amph. I. 1. 169,— 'Vox mihi ad aures advolavit. Nae ego homo infelix fui,
'Qui non alas intervelli: volucrem vocem gestito.'

72. Non...ulceret. In this construction (cp. non silcas, in S. II. v. 91) non appears to differ from ne in direct prohibitive force. It is, in Obbar's words, 'lenior adhortatio, et veluti optantis non jubentis.' So in Virg. Æn. XII. 78,—'Non Teucros agat;' it expresses more of statement than dictation="he need not lead." Cp. Geor. I. 45.

78. Tradimus. Cp. the full phrase in Cic. ad Fam. VII. 5,—'Hominem tibi trado do 'manu, ut aiunt in manum tuam'....." Cp. Theognis, 963,— Μὴ ποτ' ἐπαινέσσῃς πρὶν ἂν εἰδῇς ἄνδρα σαφηνῶς, κ.τ.λ.

82. Dente Theonino, i. e. 'maledico dente,' from one Theon, notorious for the virulence of his language.

84. Cp. Virg. Æn. II. 311,—'Proximus ardet Ucalegon.' The phrase became proverbial (as may be seen in Juv. III. 169.) Obbar quotes Ov. R. Am. 625,—'Proximus a tectis ignis defenditur ægre.'

87. Tu dum, etc. Soph. Philoct. 504, sq.

'Fair smiles the morn, and soft the zephyr blows,
'While, proudly riding o'er the azure realm,
'In gallant trim the gilded vessel goes.
. . . . . .
'Regardless of the sweeping whirlwind's sway,' &c.

91. The genuineness of this verse is more than doubtful. Many MSS. omit it. The Scholiasts either do not notice it, or supply a nominative case in place of it to oderunt. If genuine, potores bibuli is a rare phrase for "soakers." De nocte is not without its difficulty; the conjecture de luce would accord with Sat. II. VIII. 3.

ib. Media de nocte. Hand. Tursell. XI. p. 205,—'Significat per mediæ noctis tempus.' [O.] Is this accurate? Is not Bentley more correct when he says, 'Nimirum 'media de nocte fit, non quod eo usque producitur, sed quod tum primum 'incipitur?' Cp. de luce, Gr. ἠῶθεν, "from," i. e. "at daybreak." The phrase 'de nocte occurs S. II. III. 238; E. I. II. 32; I. VII. 88.

93. Nocturnos...vapores, "feverishness at night." See Epod. III. 15. Tepores is the reading of the majority of MSS., and, if genuine, must be explained per litoten. See Obbar's note. But Orelli is probably right in regarding it as a gloss upon vapores.

EPISTLE XIX.—AD MÆCENATEM.

A caustic reflection upon the faults of imitators, who as often copy the defects as the merits of those whom they profess to admire. Some who are authors fall into the drinking maxims of Cratinus. Others assume the garb of Cato, who are far from his manly force of character. Horace, now that he has become famous, is pestered with such blind admirers.

Far different had his own career been (v. 21, sqq.): he had struck out for himself a fresh untrodden track, and introduced into Italy the great models of Grecian lyric poetry; but detraction pursued him, because he took no pains to win the popular ear or the favour of critics, and because he would not descend to public displays in competition with any rivals.

EPISTLE XX.—AD LIBRUM SUUM.

With this epistle the poet closes his first book, and sends forth the volume into the world, addressing it allegorically as a person stirred by ambition, and wearied of the calm retirement and security of home. Yet he prophesies for it a wide reception, and bids it finally take forth and publish, to many a gathering concourse, the outlines of his likeness and character.

Q. HORATI FLACCI EPISTOLARUM

LIBER SECUNDUS.

The opening address is to Augustus, who is said by Suetonius to have complained that he was not mentioned in the Satires. He is classed with heroes, benefactors of antiquity, and contrasted with them in having his merits rightly judged, and in receiving homage due, even in his life-time. This introduces the proper subject of the epistle, in which complaint is made of the unreasoning eulogies passed on ancient poets, and of the neglect of contemporary and modern authors (v. 21, sqq.) These old favourites are enumerated, and the fashionable opinion of them severally is cited (vv. 50—62); the depreciation of the new generation is reasoned on, and traced to jealousy (vv. 63—89.) The love of novelty is then examined as a principle (vv. 90—113); the turn it has taken at Rome in favour of literary habits is described; its harmlessness (v. 119, sqq.), and its services to education (vv. 126–130) and to religion (vv. 132—138) are set forth, and then an outline of the rise of satiric and scenic composition (v. 139, sqq.)

Next, in scanning the defects of Roman authorship, these are traced, not to a want of spirit or invention, but of study and finish (v. 165); sometimes to a mercenary haste (v. 175.) But even the more ambitious poets meet with poor encouragement (vv. 182—207) from the public. For poets who are contented to be simply read (v. 214) there is patronage, and that as deservedly (v. 229) as freely and judiciously bestowed (v. 245.) But upon this they are foolish to presume (vv. 219—228); and if they claim it without merit, they are ridiculous, and their trash, as it must be unacceptable, deserves only to be thrown away.

(This Epistle and the next are included in the Imitations of Horace by Pope.)

EPISTLE I.—AD AUGUSTUM.

3, 5, 10, 16. With this opening eulogy, and its continuation in vv. 251—256, compare generally the Odes V. and XV. of lib. IV, adding III. III. 9—16, where these same heroes are celebrated in a like connection or comparison with Augustus.

5. Cp. Ov. Am. III. VIII. 51,—

'Qua licet, affectas (sc. hominum Natura) cælum quoque; templa Quirinus,
'Liber et Alcides, et modo Cæsar, habent.'

7. Colunt, i. e. "improve and civilize." The growth of civilization is here attributed to human benefactors, subsequently deified; to bards, inspired interpreters of the gods, in A. P. 391—400; to the introduction of language, in Sat. I. III. 103; as by Cicero to Eloquence and to Philosophy (see the references and quotations there made.)

8. Componunt...condunt. These verbs are joined together in E. I. I. 12. This passage may serve to distinguish them; the first means chiefly "to combine, adjust, reconcile;" the second, "to found and build up."

11. Portenta. Lucret. V. 37.

13. Urit...prægravat, "dazzles and depresses." This mixture of metaphors has caused difficulty here, as in Ars P. 441.

ib. Artes infra se, i. e. "inferior excellence." Cp. Eur. Fr. Beller. 5,—εἰς τἀπίσημα δ' ὁ φθόνος πηδᾶν φιλεῖ.

14. With the sentiment, comp. Carm. III. XXIV. 31; and Ov. Am. I. XV. 39; and Thucyd. II. 45,—φθόνος γὰρ τοῖς ζῶσι πρὸς τὸ ἀντίπαλον· τὸ δὲ μὴ ἐμποδὼν ἀνανταγωνίστῳ εὐνοίᾳ τετίμηται.

15. Præsenti, etc. Ov. Trist. IV. 10,—'Tu mihi, quod rarum est vivo, sublime 'dedisti Nomen.'

24. Bis quinque viri, "the Decemvirs."

26. Volumina vatum. Livy, XXV. 12, quotes two specimens of these ancient prophecies, composed by the seer Marcius. The extracts are said to be in Saturnian metre, and slightly modernised in form ('paulum immutata,' Or.) The Delphin Ed. ingeniously transmutes them into hexameters.

27. "That the Latin Muses dictated them;" i. e. that they have the spirit of true poetry. Cp. 'Musas ipsas Latine loqui credas,' Plin. Epis. II. 13.

31. The sense is,—"To argue that what is true of the Greeks must be true of the "Romans, is as absurd as to say that, if an olive is the hardest inside, so is the "nut; if the nut has a shell, so has the olive." (Some take it merely as a proverb, expressing the denial of a manifest truth.)

32. Venimus, etc. So "venit ad summum,' Cic. Tusc. Qu. III. (speaking of eloquence.) Cp. the Greek phrase, ἐπὶ τὸ πλέον ἵκεο, Theocr. I. 20. The sense is,—"We "must go on to assert that we have reached the height of perfection."

33. Unctis. Hurd interprets this to mean "assiduous;" in its common sense, it may simply answer to luctamur.

38. Excludat jurgia finis. Cp. Pers. Sat. VI. 80,—

'Depunge ubi sistam
'Inventus, Chrysippe, tui finitor acervi.'

Here the arguer 'venit ad soritas' (Cic. Acad. II. 28), 'lubricum sane et 'periculosum locum' (i. e. the mode of argument called sorites, a slippery treacherous ground for an arguer to take.) For (Ib. cap. XXIX, 'rerum na-'tura nullam nobis dedit cognitionem finium, ut ulla in re statuere possimus 'quatenus;' (i. e. reasonings upon things, in their nature relative, admit of no determinate standard, as in questions whether a person 'dives, pauper, clarus, obscurus sit; multa, panca,' etc.) Therefore, when Horace's opponent consents to lay down a finis, or fixed absolute standard, 'cadit ratione acervi,' (v. 47) his reasoning fails, baffled by the soritic process; or, falls to pieces, like the heap from which successive grains are withdrawn. (The sorites is thus defined, cap. XVI,—'Cum aliquid minutatim et gradatim additur aut 'demitur, soritas hoc vocant.')

45. Caudæ...equinæ. There is thought to be an allusion here to the story of Sertorius in Plutarch's Life, XVI.

46. Et item unum. This is Orelli's reading, after Bentley: he says, 'Videtur sermonis quotidiani esse.' Etiam unum (a phrase found in Terence, and Pers. Sat. VI. 58) he supposes to be 'ex glossemate corruptela.'

51. Leviter curare videtur, "praised as he is, he cares little whether his works sus- "tain his character;' i. e. he is a careless composer.

52. Somnia Pyth. Ennius dreamed that the soul of Homer had (according to the Pythagorean doctrine of transmigration) passed into him. So Pers. VI. 10,—

> 'Cor jubet hoc Enni postquam destertuit esse, > (i. e. "left off dreaming that he was," etc.)
> 'Mæonides, Quintus pavone ex Pythagoreo.'

56. Docti...alti, "one has repute for learning, one for lofty thought." So Quintilian, X. I. 97,—'Virium Accio plus tribuitur, Pacuvium videri doctiorem...volunt.' Persius, I. 76, mentions these two with the satiric epithets of venosus and verrucosus. Ovid calls Accius 'animosique Accius oris,' Am. I. XV. 19; and 'atrox,' Trist. II. 359. (Docti, alti, have been interpreted of Sophocles and Euripides, oddly enough.)

58. Properare. Cp. Ars P. 148,—'Semper ad eventum festinat.' It is thought to express a liveliness of plot and style, by which the interest is kept up throughout.

Orelli doubts if there could have been any other point of comparison or resemblance between these two poets. Plautus no doubt took, as his avowed models, the writers of the New Comedy; see his Prologue to the Asinaria,—'Demophilus scripsit, Maccius vortit barbare;' and his Prologue to the Trinummus,—'Philemo scripsit,' etc. Compare the (spurious) Proll. Bacchides, Casina, 32; and Terence's Prologue to the Adelphi.

But the general character of the New Comedy was perhaps traceable and traced to Epicharmus. The cast of his satire, unlike the Aristophanic, was moral, social, non-political, often mythological: it was also noted for the introduction of a new character, regularly adopted in the Latin drama,—the Parasite. It is a suggestive fact, that the rise of the Latin drama followed hard upon the first acquaintance of the Romans with Sicily. The plot of the Menœchmei (Prol. v. 12,) Sicilicissitat: Ennius wrote a poem entitled Epicharmus: from these indications we may infer in what direction this early Roman literature was drawn; and the judgment of the critics here referred to by Horace may mean simply that Epicharmus first (to use Dunlop's words, History of R. Literature, vol. I. p. 65) 'composed dramas on 'that regular, elaborate plan, which was reckoned worthy of imitation by 'Plautus.'

ib. Epicharmus of Cos, born B. C 540, died 450: he resided in Sicily, at Megara, and, after the destruction of that city, at Syracuse, in the courts of Gelon and Hiero. His plays are supposed to have combined the character of the old Megarian comedy (see Arist. Vesp. 57, sqq.) with gnomic and philosophical discourses.

71. Orbilium. Orbilius Pupillus, of Beneventum; he had served in the army, and with distinction: 'corniculo, mox equo meruit,' (Sueton. de Gramm. 9.) He settled in Rome B. C. 63, as a professor of literature, and obtained reputation and influence. He seems to have entered keenly into literary contests, as well as vindications of his profession. He published a book, the title of which is corrupt in Suetonius, but is given by Walckn. as Περιαλγής, le souffre-douleur, in which he brought forward the injustice of parents towards school-masters. After his death a marble statue was raised to him in his native town.

86. Jam, "again." Saliare...carmen. 'Saliorum carmina vix sacerdotibus suis 'satis intellecta.'—Quintil. I. VI. 40. For the Salii, see Carm. I. XXXVI. 12. Their institution by Numa is related in Livy, I. 20.

93. Cp. Virg. Æn. I. 291,—'Aspera tum positis mitescent sæcula bellis.'

ib. Nugari...in vitium...labier, i. e. "to allow of lighter studies and relaxation of ancient strictness." Obs. the correspondence of metaphor in labi with æquus.

95. Athletarum. These are denounced by Euripides, Fr. Autolyc. I.

97. Suspendit. The same metaphor is used for attentive listening,—

'Pendet...narrantis ab ore,' Virg. Æn. IV. 79.

100. Mature plena, "soon satisfied." Cp. Eurip. Hipp. 184,— ταχὺ γὰρ σφάλλει κοὐδενὶ χαίρεις, οὐδέ σ' ἀρέσκει τὸ παρὸν, τὸ δ' ἀπὸν φίλτερον ἡγεῖ.

103. Romæ dulce...et sollemne, i. e. the favourite and regular habits of the Romans were those of business.

105. Cautos...rectis, i. e. "guarded by good security." These are technical and legal terms, In Pliny. Ep. X. LXII. 2,—'Ut recte reipublicæ caveant' is, "they must give full security to the state." Cavere with acc. is "to guarantee;" cautio, "a bond, or security." The use of rectis may be illustrated from Shakesp. Merch. of Ven. Act I. Sc. III.: 'Shylock. Antonio is a good man. Bass. 'Have you heard any imputation to the contrary? Shylock. Oh, no, no! my 'meaning, in saying he is a good man, is, to have you understand me that he is 'sufficient.' A word of opposite meaning is levis, see A. P. 423. Certis is a various reading, but only worth notice for a caution against confounding it in meaning with this phrase. Cic. pro P. Quinctio, XI,—'Certis. nominibus, 'grandem pecuniam debuit;' sc. 'propter certas causas.'

110. Dictant. This should mean, as in v. 71, and S. I. X. 75, "recite or dictate, as a lesson to be learnt." And so [O.],—'Tam graviter alta voce recitant quasi 'a convivis calamo excipienda essent.' Dillenburger and others interpret it simply and plausibly, "dictate to their amanuenses," i. e. "compose." So the verb is used by Persius, I. 51,—

'Non si qua elegidia crudi
'Dictarunt proceres? non quidquid denique lectis
'Scribitur in citreis'? Also by Ovid, Trist. III. III. 86.

114. Cp. Xen. Mem. III. V 21,—οὐχ ὁρᾷς ὅτι κιθαριστῶν μὲν καὶ...οὐδὲ εἷς ἐπιχειρεῖ ἄρχειν μὴ ἐπιστάμενος...τῶν δὲ στρατηγῶν οἱ πλεῖστοι αὐτοσχεδιάζουσι.

Persius goes into this argument, Sat. v. 97,—

'Ne liceat facere hoc quod quis vitiabit agendo.
'Publica lex hominum naturaque continet hoc fas,
'Ut teneat vetitos inscitia debilis actus.
Diluis elleborum certo compescere puncto
Nescius examen? Vetat hoc natura medendi.
Navem si poscat sibi peronatus arator
Luciferi rudis, exclamet,' etc.

114. Abrotonum, "southernwood:" I have marked habrotonum among the various readings, on the authority of Hl. B. and C. Compare habrotoni in Lucret. IV. 125. (The word has both a masculine and a neuter form.)

120. Hoc studet. Observe the pronominal construction, as in Cic. Phil. VI. VII. 18, 'unum studetis.' [O.] quotes one passage from Plautus, Mil. Gl. v. 44, where studeo governs a noun in the acc. case,—'minus has res studeant.'

122. Incogitat='intendit. Apud solum Horat. nunc reperitur. Est fortasse ex 'illis quæ Græco fonte parce detorsit, ἐννοεῖ, ἐπιβουλεύει.' Orelli.

126. Os...figurat. Gr. πλάσσει τὸ στόμα. "Shapes the mouth in teaching elocution," 'ore rotundo loqui.' Poetry teaches elocution, refinement of language, good principles, good examples.

132, sqq. Carm. I. XXI. and the Carmen Sæculare are examples of this application of poetry.

135. In times of drought, rites (Aquælicium) were celebrated at Rome to Jupiter Pluvius.

144. Comp. Pers. II. 3,—'Funde merum Genio.'

ib. Memorem. This epithet more properly belongs to the Agricolæ themselves, but they ascribed their own feelings to the Genius.

145. Fescennina...licentia, "the Fescennine musical dialogue" (I take the phrase from Niebuhr, in Hare and Thirlwall's translation, vol. I. p. 112) was introduced from Fescennia, a town of the Falisci (Cp. Virg. Æn. VII. 695,) in Etruria. This was the received opinion (for which Orelli cites Catullus and Seneca.) Modern critics advance another theory, connecting the word with βασκαίνω. See the article 'Fescennina,' in the Dict. of Antiqq. The argument there drawn from the frequency of such improvisings in Italy seems little worth. 'The music of the Romans was derived from Etruria, and their 'scenic singers also;' and if this usage was so too, it was likely enough to retain its first local name, no matter how prevalent it was elsewhere, or how indigenous to the soil.

152. Lex. This sketch of early Roman poetry, and its restrictions, corresponds in a general way to that of the Greek comedy in A. P. 281. [O.] calls it 'historiam poeticam,' i. e. 'talem qualem ipse sibi conjectura informarat.' He cites, however, Cicero's mention (de Rep. I. 4) of a law in the XII. Tables; 'si quis occentavisset' (occentare="to libel, or lampoon,") making it a capital offence; from which he infers that fustis here means not simply "beating," but "beating to death," supplicium fustuarium.

154. Vertere modum. Engl, "changed their note."

158. Saturnius. The old Italian metre used by Nævius. Virus, not "malignancy," but "coarseness, rudeness," as may be seen from the contrast of munditiæ, "elegance."

167. Pope, Imitation,—

'Even copious Dryden wanted or forgo
'The last and greatest art, the art to blot.'

168. Ex medio, "from common life," 'communia sectatur.' Schol. Ov. Ars Am. III. 479, illustrates the phrase,—'E medio consuetaque verba;' and the idea, Rem. Am. 376,—'Usibus e mediis succus habendus erit.'

170. Veniæ minus, "less indulgence;" every one being able to criticise such characters as the young lover, the miserly old man, the parasite, etc.

171—4. Quo pacto, i. e. "how ill." Quantus sit, i. e. "how exaggerated." Quam non adstricto, i. e. "how negligent he is." Dossennus, a comic poet, or perhaps merely a comic character.

176. See Pers. v. 104,—'recto vivere talo.' Stet is used of the success of a play in Terent. Phorm. Prol. 10.

186. Compare the prologues to the Hecyra of Terence.

189. Aulæa premuntur. The stage-curtain did not drop, or draw up from above, (as with us,) but was raised from beneath. Cp. Virg. Geor. III. 25,—'Purpurea 'intexti tollant aulæa Britanni.' Comp. Ov. Met. III. 111,—

'Sic ubi tolluntur festis aulæa theatris
'Surgere signa solent, primumque ostendere vultum,
'Cetera paulatim: placidoque educta tenore
'Tota patent imoque pedes in margine ponunt.'

191. Regum fortuna, "unfortunate (i. e. captive) kings." All this (vv. 190—193) is the scenic representation of victories and triumphs.

192. Esseda, the Gaulish "war-chariots."

ib. Pilenta, "women's chariots" (ἁρμάμαξαι.) Virg. Æn. VIII. 666. The petorrita had four wheels. The name is derived from τέσσαρες, in its Æolic form of πίσυρες, πέτορες.

195. The camelopard, or giraffe, was first exhibited at Rome in the circus games by Julius Cæsar. See Plin. N. H. VIII. XVIII. 27.

204. Oblitus. Cp. 'illitum,' Carm. IV. IX. 14. Milton has the phrase (a sarcastic one) 'besmeared with gold,' Par. Lost, v. 356. So Luc. Nec. XVI,—χρυσόπαστον ἐσθῆτα. Cp. Juv. X. 212,—'Quibus aurata mos est fulgere lacerna' (said of public performers.) Comp. also Lucian, Nigrin. 11.

210. Per extentum funem....ire, i. e. "to achieve things marvellous and admirable."

213. Ut magus. So Plato, Menex. 2,—γοητεύουσιν ἡμῶν τὰς ψυχάς (of orators.)

223. Irrevocati. Comp. (e contr.) revocatus, "encored." Cic. pro Archia, 8, (17.)

230. Ædituos. Poets, the panegyrists of Virtue, are here, by a fine figure, made the guardians in charge of her temple (qui ædem tuentur.)

234. Rettulit acceptos. This is prop. a commercial term,="to make an entry of payment;" then, "to owe, or ascribe, to." See an instance in Cic. ad Fam. XV. 5; and Ov. Trist. II. 10,—'Acceptum refero versibus, esse nocens;' (i. e. "I owe my treatment as a criminal to my poetry.")

239. Comp. Cic. ad Fam. V. 12,—'Nec enim Alexander ille gratiæ causa ab Apelle 'potissimum pingi et a Lysippo fingi volebat'.....

244. Bœotum. The Bœotians were reproached as a dull race: Pindar, Ol. VI. 152, quotes as a proverb Βοιωτίαν ὗν; and this was ascribed to the heaviness of their atmosphere. Cp. συοβοιωτοί from Cratinus, quoted in Porson's Preface, p. 55. C. Nepos, in Alcib. 11, speaks of their bodily strength, 'magis firmitati corporis quam ingenii acumini inserviunt.' Cicero reasons on it, de Div. I. 36; Nat. D. II. 16; de Fato, IV,—'Athenis tenue cælum, ex quo acutiores..... 'Attici; crassum Thebis, itaque pingues Thebani.' Comp. Eurip. Med. 829,—Ἐρεχθεΐδαι..ἀεὶ διὰ λαμπροτάτου βαίνοντες ἁβρῶς αἰθέρος. Cp. Juv. X. 50, 264. Cp. Eur. Troad. 466,—οὗτοι φίλα τὰ μὴ φίλα.

266. Comp. Cic. ad Fam. V. 12,—'Neque.....me sempiternæ gloriæ per eum com-'mendari velim, qui non ipse quoque in me commendando propriam ingenii 'gloriam consequatur.'

270. Chartis...ineptis, i. e. "waste paper." Compare Pers. I. 43,—'Nec scombros 'metuentia carmina, nec thus;' and Martial, IV. LXXXVII. 8, EPISTLE II.—AD JULIUM FLORUM.

THIS Epistle turns mainly on the poet's own literary habits, his pursuit and subsequent neglect of poetry. He puts a case (vv. 1—20,) and tells an anecdote (vv. 25—40,) in self-defence; sketches his education and adventures (41—52,) and pleads decay of taste and activity. Then he enlarges upon the hindrances to study, the calls of society, the din of towns. Poets require (v. 81, sqq.) a world to themselves, and even (vv. 87—101) make one, living in mutual compliment. With these self-flatterers, however, he is unwilling to be classed: he has a higher conception of the dignity and the powers of a true poet (vv. 109—125,) and likens the scribbler's vanity to a monomania (vv. 126—140.) Finally, he declares himself a votary of philosophy; giving up trifling or child's play (v. 142) for manlier studies, and leaving the harmonies of words or music for the deeper harmony of wisdom and life (v. 143,) and so closes with meditation (v. 145, ad finem.)

3. Hic et, etc. Cp. the description of the Eunuch for sale in Terence, Eun. III. II. 19, sqq.

8. Argilla...uda. Pers. III. 23,—'Udum et molle lutum es;' and Ars P. 163,—'cereus flecti;' and Juv. VII. 237.

10. Æsch. Fr. Inc. 276,—οὐκ ἀνδρος ὅρκοι πίστις, ἀλλ' ὅρκων ἄνηρ.

15. In scalis latuit, an extenuating phrase for "ran away." The "stairs" seem to have been a frequent hiding place. Cp. Cic. pro Milone, 15, (40); Philip. II. IX. (21.)

16. Des nummos. This is made by some Edd. a part of the dealer's speech, but it is more properly to be taken as the apodosis to v. 3.

ib. Excepta, i. e. "made an exception to his general character."

17. Ille ferat, "you would pay; he would receive payment, without fear of any "action for false warranty." Comp. Sat. II. III. 285,—'Nisi litigiosus, exci-'peret;' and note.

21. Mea. The position of mea, in marked separation from its noun, suggests that it may be construed independently, as a neut. pl. for me, after the Greek idiom; e. g. τοὐμὸν ψέγεις, Eur. Ion, 1022.

24. Super hoc. πρὸς τούτοις. Cp. Sat. II. VI. 3; Virg. Æn. II. 348.

28. Post hoc. With this story compare the beginning of Plutarch's Life of Pelopidas.

40. Zonam, i. e. "his purse." So ζώνη, as in Xen. Anab. I. IV. 9.

44. Rectum...curvo. To be understood figuratively of "right and wrong." So Pers. IV. 11,— 'Rectum discernis, ubi inter

'Curva subit,' (speaking of moral perception.)

45. Silvas Academi. ἐν ἐυσκίοις δρόμοισιν Ἀκαδήμου θεοῦ. Eupolis in Fragm. 'The 'olive grove of Academe,' Milton, P. R. IV. 244. The leading Academician of that day was Theomnestus.

48. Responsura="to be a match for." A rare usage, but comp. Cic. Catil. II. XI. 24,—'Urbes coloniarum ac municipiorum respondebunt Catilinæ tumulis 'silvestribus.'

50. Decisis...pennis. Compare Cic. ad Att. IV. II. 5,—'Iidem illi qui mihi pinnas 'inciderant, nolunt easdem renasci.' Lucian, Gall. 22,—περιτετιλμένος τὰ πτερά.

52. Quod non desit, i. e. quod satis sit, "enough to free me from want." Cp. Cic. ad Fam. XIV. 1,—'Cui si aliquid erit, ne egeat.'

53. Cicutæ, "hemlock," used for hellebore; as in Pers. v. 145.

55. Prædantur. Cp. Soph. Antig. 681,—τῷ χρόνῳ κεκλέμμεθα. With the sentiment, cp. Wordsworth, in the Fountain,—

'Thus fares it still in our decay,
'And yet the wiser mind
'Mourns less for what age takes away
'Than what it leaves behind.'

Virg. Ecl. IX. 51,—'Omnia fert ætas, animum quoque.

59. Carmine, "lyric poetry." Iambis, e.g. "epodes." See Ep. I. XIX. 23.

60. Bioneis. Bion, a Scythian philosopher, famous for caustic wit: a saying of his is quoted in Cic. Tusc. Qu. III. 26.

66—75. Compare Juv. III. 239–248.

70. ἄδ' ὁδὸς ἄτρυτος, τύ δ' ἑκαστοτέρω ἔμ' ἀποικεῖς. Theocr. XV. 7.

ib. Humane commoda, (ironical) "very convenient!"

71. Puræ. Cp. Liv. XXIV. 14,—'Puro ac patenti campo.' So Virg. Æn. XII. 771. So καθαρός in Hom. Il. θ. 491.

72. Mulis, etc. Is cum understood? or is not the abl. governed by calidus, with its implied sense of effort? i. e. "in hot haste, with mules and men." Such a construction would fairly be classed with that of Carm. III. v. 5,—'Conjuge barbara turpis.'

73. i. e. "A crane is swinging aloft a stone," &c.

74. For the waggons in Rome, and their size, see Juv. III. 254, sqq.; and Tibull. II. III. 65,—

...'Urbique tumultus
'Portatur validis mille columna jugis.'

77. Juv. VII. 57; Ov. Trist. I. I. 41,—'Carmina secessum scribentis et otia quærunt.'

80. Contracta seems to be a metaphor from a pathway,—if broad, easy; if narrow, difficult to follow. So e contr. Propert. III. I. 14,—'Non datur ad Musas 'currere lata via.'

81. Ingenium sibi, etc. Cp. Cic. pro Archia, 6, (12),—'Ita se litteris abdiderunt, ut 'nihil possint ex his, neque ad communem afferre fructum, neque in aspectum 'lucemque proferre.'

83. Pope's Imitation,—

'So stiff, so mute! a statue, you would swear,
'Stept from its pedestal to take the air.'

84. Hic ego...? The sense is—"If genius, to be successful, must be so absorbed by "study, and so unfitted for public life, how should I make attempts at poetry "here?"

87. Frater erat..."there were two brothers at Rome ('fratres et fraternis animis,' Ep. I. X. 4), "so full of mutual admiration, that each heard from the other "nothing but compliments."

93. Molimine, i. e. "with what an air of importance!" The meaning of molimine is explained and defined by its combination with fastu,—a species of hendiadys, which may be illustrated from Virg. Æn. I. 341,—'Longa injuria, longæ ambages;' or XI. 801,—'Neque auræ nec sonitus memor;' where the second noun explains the first; and XI. 896, where implet is connected with the interpretative 'ingentem fert tumultum.' Compare in Plato, Apol. 17,—εἰς σοφίαν καὶ ἰσχύν, where the latter noun, by its dependence on the former, is restrained to an unusual meaning, viz. strength of mind. This principle may perhaps be a key to Greek usage in the combination of epithets; e.g. in Æsch. Agam. 1122, πτώσιμος may be held to define καιρία; in Eur. Her. F. 1274, ἀμφίπυρανον καὶ παλιμβλαστῆ, the second adj. is made intelligible by the first.

97. Cædimur, etc. "we, like gladiators, who give blow for blow, give compliment "for compliment.

100. 'Haud inscita fuit Torrentii conjectura,' [O.]; that Horace here refers covertly to Propertius, and his line (El. IV. I. 64*)* descriptive of himself, 'Umbria Romani patria Callimachi.'

Critics have observed, that neither Horace nor Propertius ever mention each other, though they must have moved in the same circle. It has been argued that Propertius is the unnamed of Sat. I. IX.

105. Impune. Cp. Juv. I. III. 4.

107. Gaudent scribentes. Catull. XXII. 14; Ars P. 444; and compare the context with the following lines. Cp. Cic. Tusc. Qu. I. 3,—'Suos libros ipsi legunt cum suis.

108. Cp. Ov. Pont. III. IX. 9,—'Auctor opus laudat.'

111. Splendoris. Cp. Cic. Brut. LXXXVIII. 303,—'In verborum splendore elegans' (sc. Hortensius.)

112. Ferentur=proferentur; much as feret, Ars P. 138; or, as claimants of rank before the Roman Censor, whom, if unworthy of the position, he would proceed (movere loco,) "to reject." Others interpret it as=judicabuntur. Gesner and Orelli quote 'fluit lutulentus,' Sat. I. IV. 11, and derive the metaphor 'a turbida torrentis aqua, quæ rapido cursu fertur.'

114. i. e. 'Quamvis sacrosancta videantur.' Schol. The metaphor corresponds to the old English phrase "taking sanctuary."

120. Liquidus puroque, etc. Cp. Cic. de Clar. Orat. 79, (274),—'Ita pura erat, ut 'nihil liquidius; ita libere fluebat, ut nusquam adhæresceret.'

122. Luxuriantia compescet=recidet, Ars P. 447. The metaphor may be seen in Ov. Met. XIV. 629,—

.....'Luxuriem premit et spatiantia passim
'Brachia compescit.' (A description of Pomona pruning the trees.)

123. Virtute carentia. v. 112, 'sine pondere refertur potius ad singula verba, hoc 'ad sententias.' Orelli.

ib. Tollet. Orelli says, 'Equidem explico ex Quintil. X. IV. 1,—Sequitur emendatio ...premere tumentia, humilia extollere, luxuriantia astringere...Id. VIII. VI. 11.' Cp. Cic. de Orat. III. XXVI. 104. So Dillenburger, who quotes Cic. Tusc. V. XIII. 37. To construe it as=delebit, makes a tautology.

124. Torquebitur, i. e. 'fiet quod ipse voluerit,' (Zeun,) or rather, with antithesis to ludentis, thus,—"his corrections will seem easy, yet (et=et tamen, torquebitur) "will be really the result of much effort and constant practice." So Orelli; and ringi in v. 128 seems to answer to and confirm this sense.

125. Cp. Virg. Eclog. V. 73,—'Saltantes Satyros imitabitur Alphesibæus.' Pers. V. 123,—

'Nec cum sis cetera fossor
'Tres tantum ad numeros Satyri movcare Bathylli.'

So Aristoph. Plut. 290.

128. Ringi, "to show the teeth and growl as a dog;" here, "to chafe and fret." ('Cum...norim artis regulas, nec tamen iis satisfacere queam.' Orelli.) So Pope, Essay on Man, IV. 260,—

'What is it to be wise?
''Tis but to know how little can be known;
'To see all other's faults, and feel our own.'

So Cicero, speaking of the orator M. Antonius,—'Vir acerrimo ingenio... 'multa et in se et in aliis desiderans.'—Orat. 5, (18.)

136. Opibus. 'In prosa oratione ope, auxilio, ut E. I. X. 36; C. III. III. 28.' [O.] This is denied by Obbar (see his note on E. I. X. 36); and though the plural comes very near the singular in meaning, it is more accurate to distinguish them. Opes in the other two passages may be translated "power, might;" in this one, perhaps, "resources." Or opibus curisque may be a double phrase for a single idea="the care and attendance their means provided for him." (Obbar has another explanation, viz. 'cognatorum opibus ex lege linguæ bene 'dici, cognati opibus non item.') Compare 'hominum opibus et studiis,' Cic. de Off. II. VI. 20. In Virg. Æn. VIII. 171,—'Auxilio lætos dimittam opibusque juvabo,' the sense is clearly distinguished. Cicero contrasts the plural with the singular, ad Att. IX. 16,—'Cæsar jam opes meas, non ut superioribus 'litteris, opem expectat.'

137. Meraco. 'Anticyras sorbere meracas.' Pers. IV. 16.

139. Extorta. (Cp. v. 127.) Cic. de Senect. 23,—'Quod si in hoc erro.....lubenter 'erro; nec mihi hunc errorem, quo delector...extorqueri volo.'

144. Comp. Cic. de Off. I. XL. 12,—'Ut in fidibus.....sic videndum est in vita ne 'forte quid discrepet; vel multo etiam magis, quo major et melior actionum 'quam sonorum concentus est.'

149. Monstrata, "prescribed." Cp. 'monstrata piacula,' Virg. Æn. IV. 636. So, 'monstra quod bibam,' Plaut. Men. V. 1. Compare Æsch. P. V. 490,—ἔδειξα κράσεις ἡπίων ἀκεσμάτων (though the verb is there used properly of the discovery of medicinal herbs.)

152. Donarent. Donarint, a conjecture of Bentley, admitted in some edd., is a solecism.

158. Libra...et æra. 'Verba sunt Juris' (i. e. "the technical law-term,") Schol.

159. Mancipat, "gives a title to;" i. e. in law the right by possession (=prescriptive title) is equal to that of purchase. (The line is properly parenthetical.) Lord Plunkett defined the nature of prescriptive title as follows (see Lord Brougham, in his Life of Chief Justice Bushe, who calls it 'an application of 'figure to argument absolutely magical:') 'If Time destroys the evidence of 'title, the laws have wisely and humanely made length of possession a sub-'stitute for that which has been destroyed. He comes with his scythe in one 'hand to mow down the muniments of our rights; but in his other hand the 'lawgiver has placed an hour-glass, by which he metes out incessantly those 'portions of duration which render needless the evidence that he has swept 'away.'

163. Lachmann, on Lucr. III. 954, reads modo sto (=isto.)

166. Vivas numerato. Cp. Sat. I. IV. 79; A. P. 104. In these passages the idiom differs from the English by making the verb unimportant, and subordinate to the participle; vivas numerato is=numeraveris. In A. P. 104 the literal translation in English would not only be unidiomatic, but contrary to the meaning; which is not, "if you speak your part ill," but, "if the part which you have to speak is ill set." This idiom is of constant recurrence in Greek: e. g. Thuc. I. 20,—τύραννον ὄντα ἀποθανεῖν (i. e. "that he was tyrant when he was slain;" the question was not whether he died, but whether he reigned): and in the same chapter, βουλόμενοι.....δράσαντές τι καὶ κινδυνεῦσαι (where the English idiom would put δράσαντες in the infinitive, as "wishing to effect something in their peril," or, "not to run into such peril without achieving something.")Cp. Xen. Cyrop. V. VII. 9,—σαφηνίσαντα καταλιπεῖν. Cp. Lucian, Timon, 33,—οὐ γὰρ ἀνθρώπους ὄντας βαλεῖς.

ib. Nuper...olim...quondam. Nuper (as distinguished from modo, which expresses the very shortest time preceding) denotes time absolutely distinct from the present, and (it may be) relatively long gone by. So 'nuper, i. e. paucis ante 'sæculis,' Cic. N. D. II. 50; 'quid dico nuper? immo vero modo,' Ib. Ven. IV. 3. Olim (properly the locative of ille,) "at that time, another time, sometimes," refers to indefinitely distant time, whether past or future, and is opposed to nuper. Quondam (properly the locative of quidam) refers only to the past, and is opposed to nunc. See Donaldson, Lat. Gr. p. 166.

170. Usque...qua, "up to the limit, where".....

178. Metit. Soph. Antig. 602,—κατ' αὖ νιν...νερτέρων ἀμᾷ κοπίς.

183. Alter fratrum. 'Geminos, horoscope (i. e. "ascendant planet") varo Producis 'genio.' Pers. VI. 18. (For a refined application of this sentiment, see the opening of the poem on St. Luke, in the Christian Year.)

184. Herodis, Herod the Great. Virgil, Geor. III. 12, mentions Idumæas palmas.

186. Silvestrem is the proper opposite of cultus, Ibid. 60,—'Omni materia et culta et silvestri.' So Virg. Geor. II. 51.

ib. Mitiget agrum. Cp. Cic. de Nat. D. II. 52, (speaking of the river Indus) 'Non 'aqua solum agros lætificat et mitigat, sed eos etiam conserit.'

187. Compare Spenser, F. Qu. II. XII. 47,—

'Genius . . . . . .
'That celestiall powre to whom the care
'Of life, and generation of all 'That lives, perteines in charge particulare,
'Who wondrous things concerning our welfare,
'And strange phantomes doth lett us ofte forsee,
'And ofte of secret ills bids us beware;
'That is ourselfe, whom though we do not see,
'Yet each doth in himselfe it well perceive to bee:

'Therefore a god him sage Antiquity
'Did wisely make, and good Agdistes call.'

189. Mutabilis, "variable in aspect, bright and dark," i. e. subject to and reflecting the vicissitudes of life.

195. "There is a difference between prodigal waste, and an expenditure ('neque 'invitus neque plura parans') liberal without hoarding."

199. Domus. Compare Carm. II. X. 6,—

'Tutus caret obsoleti
'Sordibus tecti.'

The reading here is uncertain. Orelli supposes 'cum Meinekio....antiquitus 'excidisse verbum...varieque supplotum esse a grammaticis, ut factum vide- 'tur Carm. IV. VI. 17, (captis.)'

ib. Utrum magna an parva. Observe utrum.....an for sive.....sive. There is an analogous construction in Ov. Rem. A. 797,—

'Daunius, an Libycis bulbus tibi missus ab oris
'An veniat Megaris, noxius omnis erit.'

That passage as well as this may be explained by supposing anacolutha: ferar unus and noxius erit may be looked on as substitutions for nihil refert. Hl. A. supplies the gloss non curo to utrum. In some cases, an may stand for dubium an, e. g. Liv. XXVIII. 43,—'Vitio orationis an rei.' Also an often stands in connection with seu or sive. (Donaldson, Lat. Gr. p. 195—6, refers to Tac. Ann. XIV. 59; XI. 26; Cp. II. 22, 38, 42; III. 3; Ov. Fast. III, 773.) In Virg. Æn. II. 738, we have ne...ne...seu with an indicative mood,—

'Fatone erepta Creusa
'Substitit, erravitne via, seu lassa resedit.'

212. Quid te..... "otherwise what good is it.....?"

214. Comp. Pope's Essay on Man, III. 70,—'Thou too must perish, when thy feast 'is o'er.'

EPISTOLA AD PISONES,

SIVE

DE ARTE POETICA LIBER.

THE title, ART OF POETRY, is of very early date, but creates a somewhat improper distinction between this Poem and those which immediately precede it. All three may be classed together as kindred in style and character, and having a common subject. The first Epistle contains a review of the earlier and later schools of Roman poetry, and a comparison of Roman and Grecian studies in literature. The second dwells upon Horace's own personal tastes and experience, and upon the foibles and fashion prevailing with the poet-astors of the day. The Epistle to the Pisos contains rules of composition. These rules are so far from exhausting the general subject, that they do not touch upon any kind of poetry except the Dramatic; and the supposition has been favourably received, that, as far as they go, they are not so much didactic as dissuasive; and that, whatever hints they might supply to the public, they were primarily intended, by a timely raillery and a remonstrance intelligible to those to whom it was addressed, to check their poetic vanity, and to divert them from attempts in which they had not genius to succeed. Hurd divides the Poem into three parts. The first (vv. 1–89) is preparatory to the main subject, containing general reflections and rules.

The main body of the Epistle (vv. 90—295) is taken up with regulations for the Roman stage, and especially for tragedy, both as the higher species of poetry, and, as it should seem, the less cultivated and understood. The third part (vv. 296—476) insists upon the necessity of correctness in language and style.

The first and opening precept (down to v. 23) regards uniformity of design in the composition of a poem. The next relates to beauties or faults of style (vv. 24—37);

v. 38, sqq. to the author's own capacity;

v. 42, to method and order of ideas;

v. 46, to order of words;

v. 49, to coinage of new words;

v. 73 proceeds to classify the various styles of poetry, the discrimination between which is essential to correctness, and also to the power of awakening interest and sympathy (vv. 92—118);

v. 119 gives a rule for the conception and portraiture of characters, which may be either original or traditionary;

v. 136 begins rules for the plan and the embellishment of a poem;

v. 154, for the correct marking of natural varieties of age and temper;

v. 179 speaks of scenic representation, and the subjects fit or unfit for it;
v. 189, of the length of a drama;
v. 193, of the chorus, with its musical accompaniments;
v. 220, of the Satyric drama;
v. 234, of its appropriate language;
v. 251, of metre;
v. 275, of the invention and improvements of tragedy;
v. 281, of comedy, and its changes;
v. 285, of the Roman drama;
v. 309, of the elements and basis of success in poetry;
v. 323, of the contrast between the Greek and Roman character;
v. 335, of didactic or instructive passages;
v. 347, of venial mistakes, as distinguished from inexcusable carelessness;
v. 366, of aiming at perfection;
v. 391, of the power of true poetry;
v. 408, of joining industry with genius;
v. 416, of self-deception and flattery;
v. 438, of true criticism;
v. 453, of fanaticism in poetry.

---

3. Undique collatis. Cp., for phrase, 'undique desectam,' Carm. I. XVI. 14; for description, Virgil's Scylla, Æn. III. 426.

8. Uni...formæ, i. e. the ideal of the poet. All that harmonises with that conception must be (unius formæ) "uniform."

16. Cp. Pers. I. 69,—

.....'Heroas sensus afferre videmus
'Nugari solitos Græce, nec ponere lucum
'Artifices.'

(i. e. They attempt the expression of heroic character, without having even skill enough for common subjects.) Cp. Virg. Æn. III. 681,—'Silva alta Jovis 'lucusve Dianæ.'

19. Non erat. The imperfect, idiomatically used for the present tense. The sense is,—"You find now there is no place for these flourishes; and if you still will "have them, you act as the painter, who wished to introduce a cypress, when "his subject was a sea-piece."

21. Qui pingitur. Cp. Juv. XIV. 301,—

.....'Mersa rate naufragus assem
'Dum rogat, et picta se tempestate tuetur.'

And Pers. I. 89,—

'Cantas cum fracta te in trabe pictum
'Ex humero portes.'

Ib. VI. 32,— 'Largire inopi ne pictus oberret
'Cærulea in tabula.'

22. Currente rota, the potter's "wheel," mentioned by Homer, Il. σ. 601,— τροχὸν ἁρμενον ἐν παλάμῃσιν ἑζόμενος κεραμεὺς πειρήσεται αἴ κε θέῃσιν.

Cp. Mart. XIV. 102,—'Surrentinæ leve toreuma rotæ.'

23. Dumtaxat (provided one estimates it, i. e. dum aliquis taxat) denotes "only," as expressing a limitation in the judgment of the speaker=not less than, i. e. "at least;" or, not more than, i. e. "at most." Here the sense is, "let any "poem, whatever be its merits, at least have those of simplicity and uniformity."

25. Decipimur specie. 'Fallit enim vitium specie virtutis et umbra.' Juv. XIV. 109.

28. Compare Pope's Essay on Criticism, 240:

'In such lays as neither ebb nor flow,
'Correctly cold and regularly low,
'That, shunning faults, one quiet tenor keep;
'We cannot blame indeed, but we may sleep.

(With vv. 32, 34, compare the succeeding lines),—

'Tis not a lip or eye we beauty call,
'But the joint force and full result of all.'

29. Prodigialiter, "in a marvellous way," i. e. "by introducing prodigies."

30. Delphinum. Cp. Archiloch. Fr. LXIX. 7.

32. Æmilium...ludum, said by the Scholiast to be an old gladiatorial school of Æmilius Lepidus. It stood in the Forum Romanum.

ib. Unus. See Bentley's note for proving and illustrating this reading. The word is again confounded with imus by MSS. at v. 152.

40. Potenter. 'Secundum quod potest.' Schol.

45, 46. These two verses are transposed in some editions.

46. Serendis. 'Serere. εἴρειν, connectere, unde sermo.'—Gesn.

49. Abdita rerum, e. g. "modern, or new, discoveries." Abdita fata is used of future time in Tibull. II. 5.

50. Cinctutis, i. e. ancient; who wore the rude undress of former times: "bare-armed." Lucan has in the same sense 'exserti Cethegi,'—(Phars. II. 543.) The word is only found here and in Ov. Fast. V. 101, of the Luperci, who stripped themselves to the mere cinctus, a band over the loins.

55. Ego...invideor, instead of the usual construction, mihi invidetur. Cp. imperor, Ep. I. v. 21. So in Ov. Trist. IV. II. 49, circumplaudere; in Ov. Met. VII. 98,—'creditus accepit,' (sc. Jason.) (See Cic. Tusc. III. 9,—'Ut videre, sic invi-dere florem rectius quam flori.')

59. Signatum præsente nota, "stamped with the current mark;" i. e. such as will give it present currency. The same metaphor is used by Juv. VII. 55,— 'Vatem.....

'Qui nihil expositum soleat deducere, nec qui 'Communi feriat carmen triviale moneta.'

ib. Producere, "to bring out, into use." Bentley suggests procudere; exhausting the metaphor, and introducing a tautology.

60. Hom. Il. ζ. 146,—οἵη περ φύλλων γενεὴ τοιήδε καὶ ἀνδρῶν.
Cp. Virg. Æn. VI. 309,—

'Quam multa in silvis autumni frigore primo
'Lapsa cadunt folia.'

60. Pronos...in annos, "at the fall of the year; as the years pass." Cp. 'pronos menses,' Carm. IV. VI. 39.

61. Prima, i. e. 'quæ in arboribus sunt ineunte vere, defluunt autumno.'—Fisch.

63. Debemur. Θανάτῳ πάντες ὀφειλόμεθα. Simonides, Fr. 123. So Ov. Met. X. 32.

ib. Receptus...Neptunus, i. e. the formation of the Portus Julius. This was done B. C. 37, by connecting the Lucrinus lacus with the Avernus, and making a cut for ships through part of the seaward bank of the Lucrine, while the rest of the bar was strengthened. The work is described in Virg. Georg. II. 161,—

.....'Portus Lucrinoque addita claustra,
'Julia qua ponto longe sonat unda refuso,
'Tyrrhenusque fretis immittitur æstus Avernis.'

65—68. Sterilisve...iter melius. What works are here meant? The Scholiasts say, a drainage, first, of the Pomptine Marsh; secondly, of the swamps of the Velabrum. Of the first alleged work there is no record. Orelli understands the second 'de cursu Tiberis aggeribus correcto;' after, possibly, the inundation mentioned Carm. I. II. But if cursum mutavit could be applied to such a work, iniquus frugibus seems a strange epithet for a flood which came 'dejectum monumenta Regis Templaque Vestæ.' May not the fact be, that the Portus Julius alone was completed—the other two works merely projected?

It is known that J. Cæsar planned the draining of the Pomptine Marsh, and a canal to Tarracina; and if Augustus proposed or commenced in earnest the completion of those plans, the panegyrical allusion here made would be both natural and naturally expressed.

65. Palus. The shortening of the last syllable is a singular licence; but it is recognised and attested by Servius on Virg. Æn. II. 69; VI. 107.

70. Cecidere, cadentque, a phrase from Lucret. III. 969.

75. Impariter junctis. See Ov. Am. I. I. 27,—

'Sex mihi surgat opus numeris, in quinque residat:

. . . . . .

'Musa, per undenos emodulanda pedes.'

76. Voti sententia compos, "successful love."

80. Cothurni. Cp. Ov. Am. III. I. 11—14:

'Venit et ingenti violenta Tragœdia passu;

. . . . . .

'Lydius alta pedum vincla cothurnus erat.'

81, 82. Aristotle on Poetry (see the translation in Theatre of the Greeks) describes the iambic metre as μάλιστα λεκτικὸν (colloquial) τῶν μέτρων, ch. IV. and πρακτικὸν (adapted to action and business), ch. XXIV.

83, 84. See the description of Pindar's poems, and their varieties, in Carm. IV. II. 10—24. Cp. Carm. I. XII. 1.

86. Colores, metaphor for "character or cast of poetry;" and so, in speaking of orators, Cicero says,—'Habitum orationis et quasi colorem.' De Orat. III. 52, (199); and III. 25, (96, 100.) Again, 'Sentio orationem...quasi colorari.' Ib. II. 14, (60.)

91. Cenæ Thyestæ:—Θυέστου δαῖτα παιδείων κρεῶν. Æsch. Agam. 1242. Cassandra sees it (in her mind's eye), Ibid. vv. 1096, 1217. Cp. Cic. de Off. I. 28—'Natis sepulchro ipse est parens.' A line spoken by Atreus in a play (supposed) of Attius.

94. Delitigat, "gives full vent to his wrath." De, properly "down from," passes into the sense of "going forward, right on to the end."

97. Ampullas. Cp. Ep. I. III. 14,—"inflated, affected phrases." (Ampulla was literally "a flask or cruet, of protuberant shape.") So Cicero (ad Att. I. XIV. 3) uses λήκυθους of his own rhetorical flourishes. The verb pingere, there used in connection with it, and the Scholium quoted by Orelli, 'quasi ex colorum ac pigmentorum vase λήκυθῳ,' seem to point to another origin for the metaphor, viz., the contents, rather than the shape of the lecythus, as a colouring or cosmetic vase. The sense would then be rather fine than swelling language, but would express Cicero's λήκυθος more correctly than Horace's ampulla.

98. Cp. Pers. I. 91,—

'Verum nec nocte paratum

'Plorabit qui me volet incurvasse querella.'

100. Quocumque volent. Cp. Cicero de Oratore, I. 8, (30),—'Voluntates impellere 'quo velit, unde autem velit deducere.'

104. Male...mandata. Some edd. construe male with loqueris; forgetting that the rules here given are designed for the poet, not for the players. (So v. 112.) One is reminded of Hamlet's rule, though that is addressed to actors,—'Suit 'the action to the word, the word to the action.'

105. Dormitabo. Cp. Cic. de Cl. Orat. 80, (278),—'Somnum isto loco vix tenebamus.' (There, we may observe, the fault imputed lay in the delivery, not the diction of the speaker, Calidius.)

111. Animi...interprete lingua. A phrase of Lucretius, VI. 1149.

113. Equites peditesque, i. e. "all ranks." Cp. the proverbial phrase, equis virisque, "horse and foot." So Liv. I. 44; and Soph. Œd. Col. 898,—πάντ' ἀναγκάσει λεὼν ἄνιππον ἱππότην τε. So Thuc. VII. 87, ult.

114. Divusne. Al. Davusne, i. e. "a slave;" a reading out of place, where the subject is the delineation of tragic characters. Divus and heros are properly contrasted, as in vv. 83 and 227; and Carm. I. XII. 1—3.

116. Matrona potens, the lady or mistress of the house; in tragedy, δέσποινα: but potens connects itself with the Homeric πότνια, which matrona also seems to represent in Carm. III. IV. 59.

ib. Sedula nutrix. Homerice, ὀτρηρὴ ταμίη.

131. Publica materies, etc. There is some difficulty in determining whether communia (v. 128*)* is the same with publica materies, and proprie equivalent to privati juris. Those who so understand the passage construe thus: "It is "not easy so to treat common subjects (τὰ ἐν μέσῳ="open to all") as to make "them your own;" proprie dicere being=propria facere dicendo. But it seems safer to consider them as separate in signification; to connect v. 128 more closely with the preceding, and to oppose it to the subsequent context. Thus (si quid inexpertum, v. 125),—"in attempting an original subject, clearness "and consistency must be maintained. But it is difficult to give general ideas "a character of their own (proprie, i. e. to individualise abstractions): there-"fore you will do better to adopt a work like the Iliad, and draw out further, "or develop anew, the materials it will supply." Communia will then be= notions of character, such as courage, cowardice, passion, etc. Publica materies will be=the mythic and epic stories, from which materials have been, and yet may be, drawn for poetry.

132. i. e. "If you do not keep to a beaten and vague round of sentiment." The contrast seems to be between platitudes and precision of thought and expression.

134. Desilies. A phrase founded apparently on Æsop's fable, the Goat in the Well.

136. Cyclicus. For an account of the poets of the Cycle, see Thirlwall's Greece, Vol. II. ch. XII. Amongst their number, Arctinus and Lesches may be mentioned as most famous.

138. Hiatu, i. e. "mouthing." 'Fabula seu mœstò ponatur hianda tragœdo.' Pers. V. 3.

141, 142. The opening lines of the Odyssey,—ἄνδρα μοι ἔννεπε, κ.τ.λ.

143. The meaning is, that Genius, beginning simply rather than showily, works out its subject into clearness and beauty. The metaphor may be referred to the proverb in Plautus (Curc. I. 1. 53) 'flamma fumo proxima.' A verbal correspondence is found in Lucian, Timon I,—λῆρος καὶ καπνὸς ποιητικός. Euripides, Hippol. 954, has the phrase γραμμάτων καπνούς.

144. Speciosa. Cp. Ep. II. II. 116; and below, v. 319; i. e. striking episodes to embellish the argument.

145. Antiphaten. The cannibal Læstrygonian chief in Odyss. κ. 114, sqq. The story of Scylla is in μ. 85, sqq.; of the Cyclops, in ι. 187, sqq.

Cp. Juv. XV. 16,—

'In mare nemo
'Hunc abicit sæva dignum veraque Charybdi
'Fingentem immanes Læstrygonas atque Cyclopas?'

146. Œneus was father of Meleager: afterwards he married Peribœa, and became father of Tydeus.

151. Cp. Hesiod, Theog. 27.

152. Discrepet, "be out of harmony with." The same metaphor as absona, in v. 112. The figurative use of this verb is illustrated by contrast in C. N. D. 1,—'Re concinere, verbo discrepare.' Its literal and its figurative meanings are brought out in Cic. de Off. I. XL. 12,—'Sic videndum est in vita ne forte quid 'discrepet, vel multo etiam magis quo major et melior accionum quam sonorum 'concentus est.'

157. Decor, etc. Cic. de Off. I. 28,—'Tum servare illud poetas dicimus quod deceat, cum id quod quaque persona dignum est, et fit et dicitur.'

158. Ov. Met. XV. 221,—

'Editus in lucem jacuit sine viribus infans;
'Mox quadrupes, rituque tulit sua membra ferarum:
'Paulatimque tremens et nondum poplite firmo
'Constitit adjutis aliquo conamine nervis.
'Inde valens veloxque fuit; spatiumque juventæ
'Transit, et emensis medii quoque temporis annis
'Labitur occiduæ per iter declive senectæ.'

161. Cp. Ter. Andr. I. 1. 28.

163. Cereus. Cp. Shakespeare, K. Hen. VI. Part III. Act II. sc. 1,—
'The proud, insulting queen, with Clifford.....
'Have wrought the easy-melting king, like wax.'

168. Cp. Eur. Fr. Cresph. 8,— κέρδη τοιαῦτα χρὴ τινα κτᾶσθαι βροτῶν ἐφ' οἷσι μέλλει μή ποθ' ὕστερον στένειν.

180. Segnius, etc. So it is said in Soph. Œd. Tyr. 1238,— τῶν δὲ πραχθέντων τὰ μὲν ἄλγιστ' ἄπεστιν· ἡ γὰρ ὄψις οὐ πάρα·

Cp. Ov. Heroid. IX. 120.

191. Nec deus. Cic. de Nat. D. I. 20, (53),—'Ut tragici poetæ, cum explicare 'argumenti exitum non potestis, confugitis ad deos.' (From Plato, Cratylus, p. 425.)

ib. Vindice, "some interposing power." Cp. the phrase nullo vindice, Ov. Met. I. 89; Rem. Am. 145.

193. Officium virile, i. e. "the single part;" not that virile could bear this sense, unless the context supported it, as here actoris does. Gesner quotes 'vultumque virilem perfudit,' (sc. 'viri, Actæonis.') Ov. Met. III. 189.

197. Tumentes. Cp. Virg. Æn. VIII. 40,—'Tumor omnis et iræ;' and VI. 407,—'Tumida ex ira corda;' and above, Sat. II. III. 213.

202. Orichalco. Gr. ὀρείχαλκος="mountain-ore." It seems to have been a composite substance, differing in kinds and processes of combination, and in colour. Virgil calls it "white," 'auro squalentem alboque orichalco,' Æn. XII. 87, where Forbiger refers the epithet ad splendorem: it may, however, mark the kind. Some kinds resembled gold, see Cic. de Off. III. 23; and cp. Plautus, Curc I. III. 46. (Servius asserts its high value, but Lambinus on Plaut. l. c. infers that he confounded it with æs.)

211. Numerisque modisque, "measures and music." See Ep. II. II. 144; I. XVIII. 59.

212. Indoctus quid....." how could the rude and jovial multitude have an exact "or severe (cp. the adj. in v. 216), i. e. simple taste? They could not; they "required variety in the music, new notes (voces crevere) in the instruments."

214. Motum...luxuriem, "quicker movement and richer modulation." Hurd. Motum may apply to the character of the music, or the movements and dancing. Luxuriem. Cp. Plin. H. N. XVI. XXXVI. (66),—'Varietas accessit, 'et cantus quoque luxuria.'

215. Vestem, "a train." 'Syrma tragicum. Cp. Ep. II. I. 207.' Or.

217. Et tulit, etc. i. e. "and the language also assumed a greater flow and solemnity."

220. Qui. 'Non dicit Thespin invenisse drama satyricum, sed hoc; non ita multo 'post inventam tragœdiam illud quoque genus inventum esse.' [O.] Pratinas of Phlius, contemporary with Æschylus, was reputed the inventor of it: it was in fact a subdivision of Tragedy.

ib. Hircum. ἆθλον ἐτέθη ὁ τράγος. Arundel Marble. So Virg. Geor. II. 380,—

'Baccho caper omnibus aris
'Cæditur, et veteres ineunt proscenia ludi,
'Præmiaque ingeniis pagos et compita circum
'Thesidæ posuere.'

So Tibull. II. I. 51—58. Donaldson (in Theatre of the Greeks, ed. VII. p. 40) contends that τραγῳδία meant the song of the τράγοι, i. e. of the chorus of Satyrs.

221. Mox etiam, "presently also." 'Utrumque genus antiquissimum fuisse ait 'Horatius. Redde igitur alsbald auch.' Hand. in [O.]

ib. Satyros nudavit, i. e. "introduced also the Satyric drama."

222. Incolumi gravitate, i. e. "bidding farewell to seriousness." So Hurd, ingeniously and plausibly, quoting Carm. III. v. 12; and Mart. V. x. 7,— 'Ennius est lectus salvo tibi, Roma, Marone.'

Others take it, "without compromising their dignity, or their epic character."

224. Exlex, "with a perfect feeling of liberty."

225. Commendare. The sense is,—"The utmost taste is required in introducing "these farcical characters, nor is any deus or heros so introduced to adapt him- "self to the level of the vulgar by adopting low language, nor to show his "superiority to them by bombast."

226. Vertere...ludo, i. e. "to travestie." [O.] gives the Sylens of Euripides as an illustration.

228. Cp. Lucian, Necyom. 16.

ib. Conspectus in...ostro. Virg. Geor. III. 17,—'Victor ego et Tyrio conspectus in ostro.'

233. Paulum pudibunda, i. e. "with something of reserve and reluctance."

234. Inornata et dominantia, i. e. pura, as in Sat. I. IV. 54: "bald and literal terms." Cp. 'Non propria verba rerum sed pleraque translata.'—Cic. de Cl. Orat. 79, (274); and, 'Verbis ..quæ propria sunt et certa, quasi vocabula 'rerum pæne una nata cum rebus ipsis;'—(opp. to 'iis quæ transferuntur,' i. e. "metaphors.")—Cic. de Orat. III. 37, (149.)

238. Emuncto, "cheated." As in Terent. Phorm. IV. IV. 1,—'Emunxi argento senes.' (Used differently in Sat. I. IV. 8.)

240. Ex noto fictum, etc. This is sometimes explained of "the plot of a drama," but the context refers wholly to the language: "So made up of (=composed "in such) familiar terms, that any one may think he could write as well." Noto is the same as de medio sumptis. Orelli quotes Cic. Orat. 49, (163)—'Non, ut poetæ, exquisita ad sonum, sed sumpta de medio.'

242. Junctura. See above, v. 48. Comp. Pers. V. 14, (see Gifford's edit.),—'Verba 'togæ sequoris, junctura callidus acri.'

245—247. The general sense is,—"They must not affect too great a nicety or "polish of tone, nor, on the other hand, offend by coarseness." Comp. Arist. Ran. 906,— ὅπως ἐρεῖτον ἀστεῖα καὶ μὴτ' εἰκόνας μήθ' οἷ' ἂν ἄλλος εἴποι.

(i. e. no slang or vulgar terms.)

245. Forenses. Quintilian (X. I. 55), characterising the style of Theocritus, opposes the forum to urbem, and both words to Musa rustica et pastoralis, 'quæ 'non forum modo, verum ipsum etiam urbem reformidat.' Inmati trivii will therefore be="civilised;" forenses, "highly educated and refined." Compare Juv. IX. 11,—'Salibus vehemens intra pomœria natis.'

246. Juvenari, "to play a youthful, sportive, or fanciful part." Gr. μειρακιεύεσθαι. 'Cum nescio qua leporis perpetui affectatione colloqui.' Orelli. Cp. the usage of ὑποκορίζεσθαι.

ib. Teneris...versibus="mincing poetry," (a Shakspearian phrase.)

248. Quibus est...pater=ingenui. See Liv. X. 8.

252. Trimeter (Lat. trimetrus) was the name given to the verse, though it was (senarius) of six feet. Comp. Sat. I. x. 43.

253. Iambeis, Gr. ἰαμβεῖα.

258. Hic, i. e. the pure iambic foot. 259. Nobilibus. Ironice, "the much-admired."

265. An omnes...veniæ cautus, to v. 264. "Shall I write carelessly, because readers "have no ear, or because they are indifferent and will excuse it."

267. Vitavi.. merui. Plaut. Trin. V. II. 5.

270. At, "but (it is objected) your ancestors were as indifferent to defects." "Yes, 'nimium patienter;' "the Greek models must be the standard."

277. Perunctifœcibus. See Tibullus, as referred to on v. 220,—'Verum hæc potius 'ad primas comœdiæ origines pertinet, nisi omnia ficta sunt ex voce τρυγῳδία.' Orelli.

278. See Thirlwall's Hist. of Greece, vol. III. ch. XVIII. pp. 31—34 (8vo. ed.)

280. Magnum loqui. Cp. Arist. Ran. 1034,—ὦ πρῶτος τῶν Ἑλλήνων πυργώσας ῥήματα σεμνά.

283. Thirlwall, ch. XVIII,—'In the time of Pericles, B. C. 440, a law was passed at 'Athens to restrain the exhibition of Comedy.....All that is certain is, that it 'remained in force no more than two or three years.'

288. Prætextas, sc. fabulas; tragedies or tragi-comedies, representing the deeds of Roman kings and generals: historical, like Shakespeare's plays.

ib. Togatas; comedies represented in Latin costume, and with Latin subjects and scenery; as contrasted with fabulæ palliatæ, which were exhibited in Greek costume.

292. Pompilius sanguis. The Gens Calpurnia, to which the Pisones belonged, traced its name and descent from Calpus, the third son of Numa Pompilius.

294. Perfectum. 'Ita ut perfectum sit.' Orelli.

ib. Ad unguem, as the Gr. εἰς ὄνυχα, "to a nicety;" or as our metaphor, "to a hair." So,— 'In unguem

'Arboribus positis secto via limite quadret.' Virg. Geor. II. 278.

(i. e. let the planting be in an exact row.) Comp. Pers. I. 63,—

'Quis populi sermo est? Quis enim, nisi carmina molli
'Nunc demum numero fluere, ut per leve severos
'Effundat junctura ungues?'

The origin of the phrase is the testing the smoothness of a model, by passing the nail along it.

295. The truth of this aphorism is touched on below, v. 498.

296. Excludit sanos. 'Negat sine furore Democritus quemquam poetam magnum 'esse posse.' Cic. de Divin. I. 37, (80.) So again de Orat. II. 46, (194.) Cp. Plato, Phædr. p. 245,—ὃς ἂν ἄνευ μανίας Μουσῶν ἐπὶ ποιητικὰς θύρας ἀφίκηται πεισθεὶς ὡς ἄρα ἐκ τέχνης ἱκανὸς ποιητὴς ἐσόμενος, ἀτελὴς.....ἠφανίσθη. And the opening of Shakesp. Mids. Night's Dream, Act V. (Both passages are quoted in Keble, Prælect. IV. p. 43.)

307. Opes, sc. poetæ, and the source 'unde parantur' is (v. 309) 'sapere.'

309. Sapere, "knowledge," especially of men and manners, (as explained in vv. 312—315.)

310. Rem, "the subject matter." The general sense is, that there can be no true poetry without philosophy.

319. Speciosa.....etc. 'Striking in its moral topics, and expressing manners 'correctly.' Hurd.

320. i. e. "With no artificial beauty, or good versification."

326. Dicat. This, and the following lines, have been variously explained. Some understand the question to be a school-question put by the master. I would rather suppose Albinus to be examining his son at home as to his proficiency; and I would assign to him the words poteras dixisse="you must be able to, "you surely can, tell me." But this clause has been assigned to the poet in the sense of "suppose you answer, Triens." This method involves what Gesner calls 'festiva personarum enallage;' and it is hardly tenable, unless the reading poterat is adopted.

330. Peculi. A contemptuous term for "money;" as much as saying that the money-seeker is a slave. 'Cura peculi,' Virg. Ecl. I. 33. 'Cultis augere peculia 'servis,' Juv. III. 189. The same ironical or figurative sense is to be seen in Cic. Paradox. V. 39,—'Cupiditate peculii nullam condicionem recusant duris- 'simæ servitutis.' But Mr. Conington, on Virg. Ecl. I. 33, suggests a different explanation.

332. Linenda cedro. Cp. Pers. I. 42,—'Cedro digna locutus.' Cp. Ov. Trist. III. I. 13. Cedar oil was a preservative against moths, and so was cypress wood, which was used for cases.

333. Compare the three points of an orator, Cic. de Cl. Orat. 275,—'Ut doceret, ut 'delectaret, ut moveret.'

337. Omne. Not quite the same as omnia: thus, omnia pulchra="everything "beautiful;" omne pulchrum="every individual thing that is beautiful." (See Madv. Gr. 301, b.)

352. Fudit, i. e. "has let fall," μεθῆκε. As in Eur. Ion, 256,—μεθῆκα τόξα="I "spoke thoughtlessly."

354. Scriptor...librarius, "a transcriber."

371. Cascellius Aulus. Famous for his opposition to the triumvirs.

374. Compare Sydney Smith, Moral Philos. lect. X,—'Mankind are always more 'fastidious about that which is pleasing, than they are about that which is 'useful,'

375. Sardo melle. The honey from Corsica and Sardinia 'pessimi saporis est.' Schol. Comp. Virg. Ecl. VII. 41; and IX. 30.

385. Cic. de Off. I. 31,—'Neque enim attinet naturæ repugnare, nec quicquam 'sequi quod assequi non queas.....ideo quia nihil decet invita Minerva, ut 'aiunt, id est, adversante et repugnante natura.'

388. Prematur. Cp. 'Hæc inclusa habebam,' Cic. Acad. I. 3.

391. Silvestres homines, etc. Cp. Cic. de Invent. I. 3.

392. Cædibus ..Orpheus. Arist. Ran. 1032,—

'Ορφεὺς μὲν γὰρ τελετάς θ' ἡμῖν κατέδειξε φόνων τ' ἀπέχεσθαι.

ib. Victu fœdo='glandibus et ferina cruda.' [O.] Compare Ovid, Fast. IV. 401,—

'Prima Ceres homini ad meliora alimenta vocato
'Mutavit glandes utiliore cibo.'

393. Rabidos. An epithet of furious wild beasts, and properly defended by [O.] against the corruption, rapidos. So it is used in Ov. A. A. III. 8. Cp. ventris rabies, in Virg. Æn. II. 356.

399. Leges incidere ligno. Plutarch, in the Life of Solon (c. 25), describes the wooden tablets (κύρβεις and ἄξονες) on which they were graven. Ovid speaks of 'verba minacia fixo ære,' Met. I. 91.

400. Divinis vatibus. Cp. Ov. Am. III. IX. 17,—

'At sacri vates et Divum cura vocamur,
'Sunt etiam qui nos numen habere putent.'

402. Mares, "manly." Ep. I. I. 64. So ἄρσενάς τοι τῆσδε γῆς οἰκήτορας εὑρήσετ', Æsch. Suppl. 952. ἄρσενι δ' Ὀθρυάδαο φόνῳ, Simon. Epigr.

404. Vitæ monstrata via, i. e. these were didactic poems, ὑποθῆκαι.

408. Ovid's character of Ennius (Trist. II. 424*)*, and of Callimachus (Am. I. XV. 14*)*, may supply examples of the point in question here.

409. οὔτε φύσις ἱκανὴ γίνεται τέχνης ἄτερ οὔτ' αὖτε τέχνη μὴ φύσιν κεκτημένη.
Simylus, Fragm. Meineke, vol. I. p. XIII.

422. Unctum...ponere. Some interpret unctum of "a person" (as in Ep. I. XVII. 12), "to entertain a guest:" others, of "a rich dinner," as in Ep. I. XV. 44, which seems better.

423. Levi, "of light (i. e. insufficient) credit."

431. The commentators quote here some verses of Lucilius,—

'Mercedo quæ
'Conductæ flent alieno in funere præficæ,
'Multo et capillos scindunt et clamant magis.'

437. Sub volpe. Pers. V. 117,—

'Fronte politus
'Astutam vapido servas sub pectore vulpem.'

441. Male tornatos. So Propert. II XXXIV. 43,—'Angusto versus includere torno.'

ib. Incudi. So Pind. Pyth. I. 86,—ἀψευδεῖ δὲ πρὸς ἄκμονι χάλκευε γλῶσσαν, (i. e. "speak truth.") To get rid of the mixture of metaphors, Bentley reads ter natos, 'satis inconcinne;' and indeed the two ideas are not incompatible, since the lathe (tornus) seems to have been used in working metals.

444. Cic. ad Q. Fratrem, III. VIII. 4,—'Quam ineptus quam se ipse amans sine rivali.' Cp. Ep. II. II. 108.

447. Ambitiosa. Perhaps in its first signification, as derived from ambio,= luxuriantia. Cp. Carm. I. XXXVI. 20.

452. Derisum.. exceptum sinistre, "flattered and treated uncandidly." Orelli has a different int.,—'derisum, a popularibus suis explosum.' Sinistre has been thought to be adopted from Menander, Μισογ. I. (in a different sense),—ἐπαριστέρως γὰρ αὐτὸ λαμβάνεις, i. e. "You take matters the wrong way, observing "only the evil, not the good points."

453. Morbus regius=morbus arquatus, "jaundice."

454. Fanaticus. 'Fanaticum errorem pati dicuntur qui a Faunis percutiuntur.' Schol. But the word seems to belong more properly to fanum. Fanatici is used of the servants of a temple, and so of those under the influence of the presiding, or any, divinity; especially in the case of Cybele and Bellona; as 'fanatici Galli,' Liv. XXXVII. 9; and 'vaticinantes fanatico carmine,' Ib. XXXVIII. 18. Cp. Juv. IV. 123 (quoted in note on S. II. III. 223.) Hence it is figuratively used for "wild, frantic," 'superstitiosi et pæne fanatici,' Cic. Div. LVII. 118.

456. Secuntur is found in the old Montpellier MS. (Orelli, vol. II. p. 923) as well as the Bernese, c. This and the like forms are explained in Munro's Preface to Lucr. p. 27; also in Madvig's Gr. § 8. Or see White's larger Dict.; letter Q.

459. Longum. See Virg. Ecl. III. 79, and Conington's note.

460. Non sit. [O.] refers to S. II. v. 91, non silcas; and quotes Hand. on Tursell. IV. p. 266,—'Conjunctivus pro futuro est positus.' Yet, according to the sequence of tenses, sit, answering to clamet, is properly used,—'Si decidit; 'licet clamet, non sit'="supposing he has fallen; then, if he should cry out "ever so loudly, no one would attend to him."

464. 'He, who to be deemed
'A god, leaped fondly into Ætna flames,
'Empedocles.' Milton, P. L. III. 469.

465. Frigidus. In this adjective the Scholiast sees a reference to the philosopher's own dogma, that "cold blood" implied or caused dulness of intellect. Cp. Virg. Geor. II. 484, with Conington's note.

466. I cannot better close than with Burke's quotation and application of this passage. (It occurs in his Reflections on the Revolution, p. 127 of the 8vo edit.) He is arguing against the confusion of right with power: 'Men have no right 'to what is not reasonable, and to what is not for their benefit; for though a 'pleasant writer said 'Liceat perire poetis' when one of them, in cold blood, 'is said to have leaped into the flames of a volcanic revolution, 'Ardentem 'frigidus Ætnam insiluit,' I consider such a frolic rather as an unjustifiable 'poetic licence, than as one of the franchises of Parnassus: and whether he 'were poet, or divine, or politician, that chose to exercise this kind of right, 'I think that more wise, because more charitable, thoughts would urge me 'rather to save the man, than to preserve his brazen slippers as the monu-'ments of his folly.'
